

MISCELLANEOUS

WORKS

EDWARD GIBBON, Esquire.

OF

MEMOIRS OF HIS LIFE AND WRITINGS,

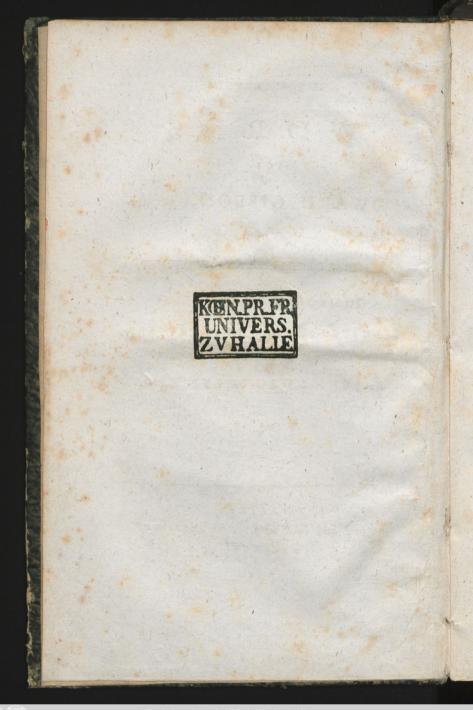

WITH

COMPOSED BY HIMSELF: ILLUSTRATED FROM HIS LETTERS, WITH OCCASIONAL NOTES AND NARRATIVE

BY JOHN LORD SHEFFIELD.

VOL. I.

BASIL: Printed and fold by J. J. TOURNEISEN. MDCCXCVI.

HE melancholy duty of examining the Papers of my deceased Friend devolved upon me at a time when I was depressed by fevere afflictions.

In that flate of mind, I hefitated to undertake the talk of felecting and preparing his Manufcripts for the prefs. The warmth of my early and long attachment to Mr. Gibbon made me confcious of a partiality, which it was not proper to indulge, efpecially in revifing many of his juvenile and unfinished compofitions. I had to guard, not only against a fentiment like my own, which I found extensively diffused, but also against the cagerness occasioned by a very general curiofity to fee in print every literary relick, however imperfect, of fo diffinguished a writer.

Being aware how difgracefully Authors of Eminence have been often treated, by an indifcreet pofthumous publication of fragments and carelefs effutions; when I had felected those Papers which to myself appeared the fittest for the public eye, I confulted fome of our common friends, whom I knew to be equally anxious with myself for a 2

Mr. Gibbon's fame, and fully competent, from their judgment, to protect it.

[iv]

Under fuch a fanction it is, that, no longer fufpecting myfelf to view through too favorable a medium he compositions of my Friend, I now venture to publish them: and it may here be proper to give fome information to the Reader, respecting the Contents of these Volumes.

The most important part confists of Memoirs of Mr. Gibbon's Life and Writings, a work which he feems to have projected with peculiar folicitude and attention, and of which he left Six different sketches, all in his own hand-writing. One of these sketches, the most diffuse and circumstantial, fo far as it proceeds, ends at the time when he quitted Oxford. Another at the year 1764. when he travelled to Italy. A third, at his father's death, in 1770. A fourth, which he continued to a short time after his return to Lausanne in 1788, appears in the form of Annals, much lefs detailed than the others. The two remaining fketches are ftill more imperfect. It is difficult to discover the order in which these several Pieces were written. but there is reason to believe that the most copious was the laft. From all thefe the following Memoirs have been carefully felected, and put together.

My hefitation in giving these Memoirs to the world arose, principally, from the circumstance of Mr. Gibbon's appearing, in some respect, not to have been fatisfied with them, as he had so frequently varied their form: yet, notwithstanding this diffidence, the compositions, though unfiniss are so excellent, that they may justly entitle my Friend to appear as his own biographer, rather than to have that task undertaken by any other person lefs qualified for it.

¥ 7

This opinion has rendered meanxious to publif the prefent Memoirs, without any unneceffary delay; for I am perfuaded, that the Author of them cannot be made to appear in a truer light than he does in the following pages. In them, and in his different Letters, which I have added, will be found a complete picture of his talents, his difpofition, his fludies, and his attainments.

Those flight variations of character, which naturally arose in the progress of his Life, will be unfolded in a feries of Letters, selected from a Correspondence between him and myself, which continued fully thirty years, and ended with his death.

It is to be lamented, that all the fketches of the Memoirs, except that composed in the form of Annals, and which feems rather defigned as heads for a future Work, cease about twenty years before Mr. Gibbon's death; and confequently, that we have the leaft detailed account of the moft interesting part of his Life. His Correspondence during that period will, in great meafure, fupply the deficiency. It will be feparated from the Memoirs and placed in an Appendix, that those who are not difpofed to be pleafed with the repetitions, familiarities, and trivial circumftances of epiftolary writing, may not be embarraffed by it. By many, the Letters will be found a very interefting part of the prefent Publication. They will prove, how pleafant, friendly, and amiable Mr. Gibbon was in private life; and if, in publishing Letters fo flattering to myfelf, I incur the imputation of vanity, I shall meet the charge with a frank confession, that I am indeed highly vain of having enjoyed, for fo many years, the efteem, the confidence, and the affection of a man, whofe focial qualities endeared him to the most accomplished fociety, and whose talents, great as they were, must be acknowledged to have been fully equalled by the fincerity of his friendfhip.

a 3

Whatever cenfure may be pointed against the Editor, the Public will fet a due value on the Letters for their intrinsic merit. I must, indeed, be blinded, either by vanity or affection, if they do not display the heart and mind of their Author, in such a manner as justly to increase the number of his admirers.

[vii]

I have not been folicitous to garble or expunge paffages which, to fome, may appear triffing. Such paffages will often, in the opinion of the obferving Reader, mark the character of the Writer, and the omiffion of them would materially take from the cafe and familiarity of authentic letters.

Few men, I believe, have ever fo fully unveiled their own character, by a minute narrative of their fentiments and purfuits, as Mr. Gibbon will here be found to have done; not with fludy and labor —not with an affected franknefs—but with a genuine confeffion of his little foibles and peculiarities, and a good-humored and natural difplay of his own conduct and opinions.

Mr. Gibbon began a Journal, a work diftinct from the fketches already mentioned, in the early part of his Life, with the following declaration:

1 propose from this day, August 24th 1761, to keep an exact Journal of my actions and studies, both to affist my memory, and to accustom me to fet a due value on my time. I shall begin by fetting down fome few events of my past life, the dates of which I can remember."

This industrious project he purfued occasionally in French, under various titles, and with the minute-

a 4

nefs, fidelity, and liberality of a mind refolved to watch over and improve itself.

The Journal is continued under different titles. and is fometimes very concife, and fometimes fingu. larly detailed. One part of it is entitled .. My " Journal," another " Ephemerides, or Journal of . my Actions, Studies, and Opinions." The other parts are entitled, « Ephémérides, ou Journal de " ma Vie, de mes Etudes, & de mes Sentimens." In this Journal, among the most trivial circumstances, are mixed very interesting observations and differtations on a Satire of Juvenal, a Paffage of Homer, or of Longinus, or of any other author whofe works he happened to read in the course of the day; and he often paffes from a Remark on the most common event, to a critical Difquifition of confiderable learning, or an Inquiry into fome abstrufe point of Philofophy.

It certainly was not his intention that this private and motley Diary fhould be prefented to the Public; nor have I thought myfelf at liberty to prefent it, in the fhape in which he left it. But by reducing it to an account of his literary occupations, it formed fo fingular and fo interefting a portrait of an indefatigable Student, that I perfuade myfelf it will be regarded as a valuable acquisition by the Literary World, and as an acceffion of fame to the memory of my Friend. With the Extracts from Mr. Gibbon's Journal will be printed, his Differtations entitled cc Extraits cc raifonnés de mes Lectures : " and cc Recueil de mes cc Obfervations, & Pièces détachées fur différens cc Sujets." A few other paffages from other parts of the Journals, introduced in Notes, will make a curious addition to the Memoirs.

His First Publication, « Effai fur l'Etude de la « Littérature," with corrections aud additions from an interleaved copy which my Friend gave to me feveral years ago, is reprinted as part of the fevolumes.

Three more of his fmaller Publications are alfo reprinted. 1. His mafterly Criticifm on the Sixth Book of Virgil, in anfwer to Bifhop Warburton. 2. His own Vindication of the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Chapters of his Hiftory, in anfwer to Mr. Davis and others. And 3. His 4 Réponfe à l'Exposé de la Cour de 44 France,"—an occafional composition, which obtained the higheft applaufe in Foreign Courts, and of which he fpoke to me with fome pleasure, observing that it had been translated even into the Turkish language *.

Of these various writings the Author has spoken himself, in describing his own Life. I have yet to notice fome articles not mentioned in his Memoirs, and which will be found in this Publication. 1. A juvenile fketch, entitled, "Outlines of the Hiftory of "the World." 2. A Differtation, which he had fhown to a few friends, on that curious fubject, "t L'Homme au Mafque de Fer." 3. A more confiderable work, "The Antiquities of the Houfe of "Brunfwick;" a hiftorical difcourfe, compofed about the year 1790. In this Work he intended to appropriate feparate books, 1. To the Italian defcent; 2. To the Germanic reign: and, 3. To the Britifh Succeffion of the Houfe of Brunfwick. The Manufcript clofes in completing the Italian branch of his fubject.

^{*} At Peterfburgh and Vienna it was currently obferved by the Corps Diplomatique, that the Englifh Miniftry had published a Memorial written not only with great ability, but alfo in French, fo corred, that they muß have employed a Frenchman.

Among the moft fplendid paffages of that unfinifhed work may be enumerated, the characters of Leibnitz and Muratori : A fketch of Albert-Azo the Second, a prince who retained his faculties and reputation beyond the age of one hundred years : An account of Padua and its univerfity, and remarks on the epic glory of Ferrara.

The laft Paper of these Volumes has the mournful attraction of being a sketch interrupted by death, and affords an honorable proof that my Friend's ardor for the promotion of historical knowledge attended him to the last. It is entitled merely, "An Address;" and expresses a wish that our Latin memorials of the middle ages, the "Sciptores Rerum Anglicarum," may be published in England, in a manner worthy of the fubject, and of the country. He mentions Mr. John Pinkerton as a perfon well qualified for the conduct of fuch a national undertaking.

In the collection of writings which I am now fending to the prefs, there is no article that will fo much engage the public attention as the Memoirs. I will therefore clofe all I mean to fay as their Editor, by affuring the Reader, that, although I have in fome meafure newly arranged thofe interefting Papers, by forming one regular narrative from the Six different fketches, I have neverthelefs adhered with fcrupulous fidelity to the very words of their Author; and I ufe the letter S. to mark fuch Notes of my own, as it feemed neceffary to add.

It remains only to express a wifh, that in difcharging this lateft office of affection, my regard to the memory of my Friend may appear, as I truft it will do, proportioned to the high fatisfaction which I enjoyed for many years in posseffing his entire confidence and very partial attachment.

SHEFFIELD.

SHEFFIELD-PLACE, 6th Aug. 1795.

BOOKS printed and fold by J. J. TOURNEISEN.

Bolingbroke's Letters on the Study of Hiftory, 1 vol. Gibbon's Hiftory of the Roman Empire, 14 vol. Robertson's Hiftory of the Emperor Charles V. 4 vol. Blair's Lectures on Rhetoric and Belles Lettres, 3 vol. Kippis' Life of Captain James Cook, 2 vol. Hume's Hiftory of England , 12 vol. Gillies' Hiftory of ancient Greece, 5 vol. Robertson's Hiftory of America, 3 vol. Middleton's Life of Cicero, 4 vol. Shaftesbury's Characteriftics. 3 vol. Ferguson's Effay on the Hiftory of Civil Society, I vol. Keate's Account of the Pelew-Iflands, 1 vol. Smith's Wealth of Nations, 4 vol. Ferguson's History of the Roman Republic, 6 vol. Robertson's Hiftory of Scotland, 3 vol. - - Difquifition concerning India, 1 vol. Delolme's Conftitution of England, 1 vol. Watfon's Hiftory of Philip II. 3 vol. - - Hiftory of Philip III. 2 vol. Burke's Inquiry into the Sublime, 1 vol. Berrington's Hiftory of Abeillard and Heloifa, 2 vol. Smith's Theory of Moral Sentiments, 2 vol. Junius's Letters, I vol. Smollet's Continuat. of Hume's Hiftory of England, 8 vol. Montague's Ancient Republics, 1 vol. Millar's Diffinction of Ranks, 1 vol. Home's Sketches, 4 vol. - Elements of Criticism, 3 vol. Lowth's English Grammar, 1 vol. à 54 kr. Bolingbroke's Remarks on the Hiftory of England. Blackwell's Memoirs of the Court of Augustus, 7 vol. Theory of agreeable, Senfations, I vol. à 54 kr.

Anderfon's Narrative of the Embaffy to China, 1 vol. Stewart's Political Economy, 5 vol.

Hiftory of Clariffa Harlowe, by Richardfon, 8 vol. Hiftory of Tom Jones, a foundling, by Fielding, 4 vol. Life and Opinions of Triffram Shandy, 2 vol.

Sentimental Journey, by Yorick, i vol.

Mifcellaneous Works of Edward Gibbon, Efqr. with Memoirs of his Life and Writings, compoled by himfelf, 7 vol.

CONTENTS

OF THE FIRST VOLUME

Page

	-5-
HE AUTHOR'S INTRODUCTION.	IS
Account and anecdotes of his family.	5
South Sea scheme, and the bill of pains and penalties against the Directors; among whom was the Author's grandfather.	13.
Character of Mr. William Law.	17
Mr. Gibbon's birth ; he is put under the care of
Mr. Kirkby; fome account of Mr. Kirkby.	21
The author is fent to Dr. Wooddefon's fchool, whence he is removed on the death of his mother, - Affectionate observations on his aunt, Mrs. Catharine Porten.	27
Is entered at Westminster school; is removed on is entered at welthinner renoor; is removed of account of ill health, and afterwards placed	32
under the care of the Rev. Mr. Francis.	54
Enters a Gentleman Commoner at Magdalen Col- lege, Oxford.—Remarks on that Univerfity.—
Some account of Magdalen College.—Cha-
Some account of Maguaten Concec Cha racter of Dr. Waldegrave, Mr. Gibbon's first	36
tutor.	30
The Author determines to write a hiftory; its fubject Solution of a chronological difficulty
Mr.Gibbon is converted to the RomanCatholic religion; cites the examples of Chillingworth and Bayle; their characters Mr. Gibbon obliged to leave OxfordFarther remarks on	4
the University.	51
The Author is removed to Laufanne, and placed under the care of Mr. Pavilliard, Reflections on his change of fituation. Character of Mr. Pavilliard, and an account of his manner of refforing
Mr. Gibbon to the Protestant Church. Mr. Gibbon received the facrament in the church of	-
Laufanne on Chriftmas-day 1754.	66
The Author's account of the books he read and of	- the courfe of fludy he purfued.	73
Mr. Gibbon makes the tour of Switzerland; forms a correspondence with several literary

CONTENTS.

ters: is introduced to Voltaire, and fees him perform feveral characters in his own plays.— Remarks on his acting.

- Some account of Mademoifelle Curfhod, (afterwards Madame Necker).—Reflections on his education at Laufanne;—he returns to England;—his manner of fpending his time.
- Mr. Gibbon publishes his first work, Effai fur l'Etude de la Littérature.—Some observations on the plan, and the character of the performance.— Character of Dr. Maty.
- The Author's manner of paffing his time in the Hampfhire militia, and reflections upon it.
- Mr. Gibbon refumes his fludies; determines to write upon fome historical fubje&; confiders various fubje&s, and makes remarks upon them for that purpofe.—Sees Mallet's Elvira performed. —Chara&ter of that play.
- The author paffes fome time at Paris, gives an account of the perfons with whom he chiefly affociated; proceeds through Dijon and Befançon, to Laufanne.—Chara&erizes a fociety there, called La Sociéte du Printemps.—Becomes acquainted with Mr. Holroyd, now Lord Sheffield. --Remarks on their meeting.
- Some account of Mr. Gibbon's fludies at Laufanne, preparatory to his Italian journey.—He travels into Italy; his feelings and obfervations upon his arrival at Rome.—He returns to England. —His reflections upon his fituation.—Some account of his friend Mr. Deyverdun.—He writes, and communicates to his friends, a historical Effay upon the Liberty of the Swifs. — Their unfavorable judgment. — Mr. Hume's opinion.
- Mr. Gibbon and Mr. Deyverdun engage in a periodical work, intended as a continuation of Dr. Maty's Journal Britannique; entitled Mémoires Litteraires de la Grande Bretagne.—Account of the work.—Mr. Gibbon publishes his observations on the VIth Æneid of Virgil, in opposition

Page 80

86

IOL

112

117

124

CONTENTS.

to Bishop Warburton's hypothefis. -- Mr. Heyne's and Mr. Hayley's opinions of that Effay. - Mr. Gibbon determines to write the Hiftory of the Decline and Fall .- His preparatory fludies .- Reflections on his domeflic circumstances ; his father's death and character. 144

- Mr. Gibbon fettles in London.-Begins his Hiftory of the Decline and Fall.-Becomes a Member of the Houfeof Commons .- Characters of the principal speakers .- Publishes his first volume; its reception .- Mr. Hume's opinion, in a letter to the Author. - Makes a fecond vifit to Paris .- His difpute with the Abbé Mably .-He enumerates and characterizes the writers who wrote against his 15th and 16th Chapters. 153
- Mr. Gibbon, by the defire of Ministry, writes the Mémoire Justificatif .- By the interest of Lord Loughborough is appointed one of the Lords of Trade .- Publishes the fecond and third yolumes of his Hiftory; their reception .--- Men-tions Archdeacon Travis's attack upon him, and commends Mr. Porfon's answer to the Archdeacon. - Notices alfo Bishop Newton's cenfure. 168
- The Author proceeds in his Hiftory; leaves London, and fettles at Laufanne, in the houfe of his friend Mr. Deyverdun; h is reafons for doing fo.-Reflections on his change of fituation .- Short characters of Prince Henry of Pruffia and of Mr. Fox. both of whom he fees at Laufanne -Proceeds in, and finishes his History .- Interesting remarks on concluding it.
- Mr. Gibbon pays a vifit to Lord Sheffield in England. -Remarks on Lord Sheffield s writings ; publishes the remainder of his History; returns to Laufanne; his manner of employing his time. -The death of Mr. Devverdun.-Observations of the Author up on the French revolution, the government of Berne, and his own fituation. 183 -The Memoirs end.
- Narrative continued by Lord Sheffield, and by letters from Mr. Gibbon. 107

Page

CONTENTS.

- Page Mr. Gibbon's account of his journey to, and arrival at, Laufanne .- The flate of Mr. Deyverdun's health, and an account of a vifit from Mr. Fox and Mr. Douglas. 199
- Mirabeau's work, Sur la Monarchie Pruffienne, and his Correspondence Secrète characterized .- Mr. Devverdun's death. - Reflections on that event .- Mr Gibbon thinks of purchasing Mr. Devverdun's eftate at Laufanne .- Reflections on the French revolution. 205
- Private circumstances discussed .- Farther reflections on the French revolution .--- Some account of Mr. Gibbon's health.
- Account of Monfieur Necker .- Character of Mr. Burke's book on the French revolution .- Mr. Gibbon propofes a declaration to be figned by the most confiderable men of all parties .- Obfervations on Lord Sheffield's election for Briftol .- Reflections on own his fituation at Laufanne,-Invitation from Mr. Gibbon to Lord Sheffield and his family to vifit him at Laufanne. 229
- Narrative continued by Lord Sheffield .- An account of his visit to Laufanne .- Letter from Mr. Gibbon to the Honorable Mils Holroyd .- Account of a visit to M. Necker. 244
- Political reflections .- Slave Trade .- Jockey Club. -Mr. Grey's motion .- Conduct of the French towards Geneva .--- French affairs.
- Second letter to the Honorable Mifs Holroyd .- Her account (in answer) of the Massacre aux Carmes. Account of General Montesquieu.-Revolution of Geneva. 285
- Perfonal reflections on Mr. Gibbon's fituation .-Mr. de Severy's death. Reflections on public affairs .- Lady Shetfield's death .- Mr. Gibbon returns to England upon that event.
- Narrative continued by Lord Sheffield .- Account of Mr. Gibbon's health ; his diforder .- Abftract of Mr. Gibbon's will. r35

MEMOIRS

210

264

MEMOIRS

OF

MY LIFE AND WRITINGS.

N the fifty-fecond year of my age, after the completion of an arduous and fuccefsful work, I now propole to employ fome moments of my leifure in reviewing the fimple transactions of a private and literary life. Truth, naked, unblufhing truth, the first virtue of more ferious history, must be the fole recommendation of this perfonal narrative. The ftyle fhall be fimple and familiar: but ftyle is the image of character; and the habits of correct writing may produce, without labor or defign, the appearance of art and ftudy. My own amufement is my motive, and will be my reward: and if these sare communicated to fome diffreet and indulgent friends, they will be fecreted from the public eye till the author shall be removed beyond the reach of criticifm or ridicule.

A lively defire of knowing and of recording our anceftors fo generally prevails, that it must depend on the influence of fome common principle in the minds of men. We feem to have lived in the perfons of our forefathers; it is the labor and reward of vanity to extend the term of this ideal longevity. Our imagination is always active to enlarge the narrow circle in which Nature has confined us. Fifty or a hundred years may be allotted to an individual, but we ftep forwards beyond death with fuch hopes as religion and philofophy will fuggeft; and we fill up the filent vacancy that precedes our birth, by affociating ourfelves to the authors of our exiftence. Our calmer judgment will rather tend to moderate, than to fupprefs, the pride of an ancient and worthy race. The fatyrift may laugh, the philofopher may preach; but Reafon herfelf will refpect the prejudices and habits, which have been confecrated by the experience of mankind.

VOL. I.

B

2

Wherever the diffinction of birth is allowed to form a superior order in the state, education and example fhould always, and will often, produce among them a dignity of fentiment and propriety of conduct, which is guarded from difhonor by their own and the public efteem. If we read of fome illuftrious line fo ancient that it has no beginning, fo worthy that it ought to have no end, we fympathize in its various fortunes; nor can we blame the generous enthusiafm, or even the harmless vanity, of those who are allied to the honors of its name. For my own part, could I draw my pedigree from a general, a statesman, or a celebrated author, I should ftudy their lives with the diligence of filial love. In the inveftigation of past events, our curiofity is ftimulated by the immediate or indirect reference to ourfelves; but in the estimate of honor we should learn to value the gifts of Nature above those of Fortune; to efteem in our anceftors the qualities that beft promote the interefts of fociety; and to pronounce the defcendant of a king lefs truly noble than the offspring of a man of genius, whole writings will inftruct or delight the lateft posterity. The family of Confucius is, in my opinion, the moft illustrious in the world. After a painful afcent of eight or ten centuries, our barons and princes of Europe are loft in the darknefs of the middle ages; but, in the vaft equality of the empire of China, the posterity of Confucius have maintained, above two thousand two bundred years, their peaceful honors and perpetual fucceffion. The chief of the family is ftill revered, by the fovereign and the people, as the lively image of the wifeft of mankind. The nobility of the Spencers has been illustrated and enriched by the trophies of Marlborough; but I exhort them to confider the Fairy Queen as the most precious jewel of their coronet. I have exposed my private feelings, as I fhall always do, without fcruple or referve. That these sentiments are just, or at least natural, I am inclined to believe, fince I do not feel myfelf interefted in the caufe; for I can derive from my anceftors neither glory nor fhame.

Yet a fincere and fimple narrative of my own life may amufe fome of my leifure hours; but it will fubject me, and perhaps with juffice, to the imputation of vanity. I may judge, however, from the experience both of paft and of the prefent times, that the public are always curious to know the men, who have left behind them any image of their minds: the moft fcanty accounts of fuch men are compiled with diligence, and perufed with eagernefs; and the fludent of every clafs may derive a leffon, or an example, from the lives moft fimilar to his own. My name may hereafter be placed among the thoufand articles of a Biographia Britannica; and I muft be confcious, that no one is fo well qualified, as myfelf, to defcribe the feries of my thoughts and actions. The authority of my mafters, of the grave Thuanus, and the philosophic Hume, might be fufficient to justify my defign; but it would not be difficult to produce a long lift of ancients and moderns, who, in various forms, have exhibited their own portraits. Such portraits are often the moft interefting, and fometimes the only interefting parts of their writings; and, if they be fincere, we feldom complain of the minuteness or prolixity of these perfonal memorials. The lives of the younger Pliny, of Petrarch, and of Erafmus, are expressed in the epiftles, which they themfelves have given to the world. The effays of Montagne and Sir William Temple bring us home to the houfes and bofoms of the authors : we finile without contempt at the headftrong paffions of Benevenuto Cellini, and the gay follies of Colley Cibber. The confessions of St. Auftin and Rouffeau difclofe the fecrets of the human heart: the commentaries of the learned Huet have furvived his evangelical demonstration; and the memoirs of Goldoni are more truly dramatic than his Italian comedies. The heretic and the churchman are ftrongly marked in the characters and fortunes of Whifton and Bifhop Newton; and even the dullness of Michael de Marolles and Anthony Wood acquires fome value from the faithful reprefentation of men and manners. That I am equal or fuperior to fome of thefe, the effects of modefty or affectation cannot force me to diffemble.

B 2

My family is originally derived from the county of Kent. The fouthern diffrict, which borders on Suffex and the fea, was formerly overfpread with the great foreft Anderida, and even now retains the denomination of the Weald, or Woodland. In this district, and in the hundred and parish of Rolvenden, the Gibbons were poffeffed of lands in the year one thousand three hundred and twenty-fix; and the elder branch of the family, without much increase or diminution of property, still adheres to its native foil. Fourteen years after the first appearance of his name, John Gibbon is recorded as the Marmorarius or architect of King Edward the Third : the ftrong and ftately caftle of Queensborough, which guarded the entrance of the Medway, was a monument of his skill; and the grant of a hereditary toll on the paffage from Sandwich to Stonar, in the Ifle of Thanet, is the reward of no vulgar artift. In the visitations of the heralds, the Gibbons are frequently mentioned : they held the rank of Efquire in an age. when that title was lefs promifcuoufly affumed: one of them, under the reign of Queen Elizabeth, was captain of the militia of Kent; and a free school, in the neighbouring town of Benenden, proclaims the charity and opulence of its founder. But time, or their own obscurity, has cast a veil of oblivion over the virtues and vices of my Kentish ancestors; their character or station confined them to the labors and pleafures of a rural life: nor is it in my power to follow the advice of the Poet, in an inquiry after a name-Go! fearch it there, where to be born, and die,

Of rich and poor makes all the hiftory.

B 3

6

So recent is the inftitution of our parifh regifters. In the beginning of the feventeenth century, a younger branch of the Gibbons of Rolvenden migrated from the country to the city; and from this branch I do not blufh to defcend. The law requires fome abilities; the church impofes fome reftraints; and before our army and navy, our civil eftablifhments, and India empire, had opened fo many paths of fortune, the mercantile profession was more frequently chosen by youths of a liberal race and education, who afpired to create their own independence. Our most refpectable families have not difdained the countinghouse, or even the shop; their names are inrolled in the Livery and Companies of London; and in England, as well as in the Italian commonwealths, heralds have been compelled to declare, that gentility is not degraded by the exercise of trade.

The armorial enfigns which, in the times of chivalry, adorned the creft and fhield of the foldier, are now become an empty decoration, which every man, who has money to build a carriage, may paint according to his fancy on the pannels. My family arms are the fame, which were borne by the Gibbons of Kent in an age, when the College of Heralds religioufly guarded the diffinctions of blood and name : a lion rampant gardant, between three fchallopfhells Argent, on a field Azure ² I fhould not however have been tempted to blazon my coat of arms, were it not connected with a whimfical anecdote. — About the reign of James the Firft, the three harmlefs fchallop-fhells were changed by Edmund Gibbon efq. into three Ogrefles, or female cannibals, with a defign of ftigmatizing three ladies, his kinfwomen, who had provoked him by an unjuft lawfuit. But this fingular mode of revenge, for which he obtained the fanction of Sir William Seagar, king at arms, foon expired with its author; and, on his own monument in the Temple church, the monfters vanifh, and the three fchallop - fhells refume their proper and hereditary place.

Our alliances by marriage it is not difgraceful to mention. The chief honor of my anceftry is James Fiens, Baron Say and Seale, and Lord High Treafurer of England, in the reign of Henry the Sixth; from whom by the Phelips, the Whetnalls, and the Cromers, I am lineally defcended in the eleventh degree. His difmiffion and imprisonment in the Tower were infufficient to appeale the popular clamor; and the Treafurer, with his fon - in - law Cromer; was beheaded (1450), after a mock trial by the Kentifh infurgents. The black lift of his offences, as it is exhibited in Shakespeare, displays the ignorance and envy of a plebeian tyrant. Befides the vague reproaches of felling Maine and Normandy to the Dauphin, the Treasurer is specially accused of luxury, for riding on a foot cloth; and of treafon, for fpeaking French, the language of our enemies: " Thou " haft most traiterously corrupted the youth of the " realm, " fays Jack Cade to the unfortunate Lord, " in erecting a grammar fchool; and whereas before " our forefathers had no other books than the fcore " and the tally, thou haft caufed printing to be used ; " and, contrary to the king, his crown, and dignity, " thou haft built a paper-mill. It will be proved to

B 4

8

" thy face, that thou haft men about thee, who " ufually talk of a noun and a verb, and fuch abomi-" nable words, as no chriftian ear can endure to hear." Our dramatic poet is generally more attentive to character than to hiftory; and I much fear that the art of printing was not introduced into England, till feveral years after Lord Say's death: but of fome of thefe meritorious crimes I fhould hope to find my anceftor guilty; and a man of letters may be proud of his defcent from a patron and martyr of learning.

In the beginning of the laft century Robert Gibbon efg. of Rolvenden in Kent., (who died in 1618.) had a fon of the fame name of Robert, who fettled in London, and became a member of the Clothworkers' Company. His wife was a daughter of the Edgars, who flourished about four hundred years in the county of Suffolk, and produced an eminent and wealthy ferjeant-at-law, Sir Gregory Edgar, in the reign of Henry the Seventh. Of the fons of Robert Gibbon, (who died in 1643.) Matthew did not afpire above the station of a linen-draper in Leadenhall-freet; but John has given to the public fome curious memorials of his exiftence, his character, and his family. He was born on the 3d of November in the year 1629; his education was liberal, at a grammar-school, and afterwards in Jefus College at Cambridge; and he celebrates the retired content which he enjoyed at Allefborough in Worceftershire, in the house of Thomas Lord Coventry. where John Gibbon was employed as a domeftic tutor, the fame office which Mr. Hobbes exercifed in the Devonshire family. But the fpirit of my kinfman foon immerged into more active life: he vifited foreign countries as a foldier and a traveller. acquired the knowledge of the French and Spanifh languages, paffed fome time in the Ifle of Jerfey, croffed the Atlantic, and refided upwards of a twelvemonth (1659) in the rifing colony of Virginia. In this remote province, his tafte, or rather paffion, for heraldry found a fingular gratification at a wardance of the native Indians. As they moved in meafured fleps, brandifhing their tomahawks, his curious eye contemplated their little fhields of bark, and their naked bodies, which were painted with the colors and fymbols of his favorite fcience. " At " which I exceedingly wondered; and concluded " that heraldry was ingrafted naturally into the fenfe " of human race. If fo, it deferves a greater efteem " than now a days is put upon it." His return to England after the Reftoration was foon followed by his marriage - his fettlement in a houfe in St. Catherine's Cloyfter, near the Tower, which devolved to my grandfather - and his introduction into the -Heralds' College (in 1671) by the ftyle and title of Blue-mantle Purfuivant at Arms. In this office he enjoyed near fifty years the rare felicity of uniting, in the fame purfuit, his duty and inclination : his name is remembered in the College, and many of his letters are still preferved. Several of the most respectable characters of the age, Sir William Dugdale, Mr. Afhmole, Dr. John Betts, and Dr. Nehemiah Grew, were his friends; and in the fociety of fuch men, 'John Gibbon may be recorded without difgrace as the member of an aftrological club. The

9

urn:nbn:de:gbv:3:1-700122-p0029-7

10

fludy of hereditary honors is favorable to the Royal prerogative; and my kinfman, like moft of his family, was a high Tory both in church and ftate. In the latter end of the reign of Charles the Second, his pen was exercifed in the caufe of the Duke of York : the Republican faction he most cordially detested; and as each animal is confcious of its proper arms, the heralds' revenge was emblazoned on a most diabolical efcutcheon. But the triumph of the Whig government checked the preferment of Blue-mantle; and he was even fuspended from his office, till his tongue could learn to pronounce the oath of abjuration. His life was prolonged to the age of ninety; and, in the expectation of the inevitable though uncertain bour, he willes to preferve the bleffings of health, competence, and virtue. In the year 1682 he publifhed at London his Introductio ad Latinam Blafoniam, an original attempt, which Camden had defiderated, to define, in a Roman idiom, the terms and attributes of a Gothic inftitution. It is not two years fince I acquired, in a foreign land, fome domeftic intelligence of my own family; and this intelligence was conveyed to Switzerland from the heart of Germany. I had formed an acquaintance with Mr. Langer, a lively and ingenious fcholar, while he refided at Laufanne as preceptor to the Hereditary Prince of Brunfwick. On his return to his proper station of Librarian to the Ducal Library of Wolfenbuttel, he accidentally found among fome literary rubbifh a fmall old English volume of heraldry, infcribed with the name of John Gibbon. From the title only Mr. Langer judged that it might be an acceptable prefent to his friend; and he judged rightly. His manner is quaint and affected; his order is confufed : but he difplays fome wit, more reading, and ftill more enthufiafm; and if an enthufiaft be often abfurd, he is never languid. An Englift text is perpetually interfperfed with Latin fentences in profe and verfe; but in his own poetry he claims an exemption from the laws of profody. Amidft a profution of genealogical knowledge, my kinfman could not be forgetful of his own name; and to him I am indebted for almoft the whole of my information concerning the Gibbon family. From this fmall work (a duodecimo of one hundred and fixty-five pages) the author expected immortal fame : and at the conclusion of his labor he fings, in a ftrain of felf-exultation;

Ufque huc corrigitur Romana Blafonia per me; Verborumque dehinc barbara forma cadat. Hic liber, in meritum fi forfitan incidet ufum, Teftis rite meæ fedulitatis erit.

Quicquid agat Zoilus, ventura fatebitur etas Artis quôd fueram non Clypearis inops.

Such are the hopes of authors! In the failure of thofe hopes John Gibbon has not been the first of his profession, and very possibly may not be the last of his name. His brother Matthew Gibbon, the draper, had one daughter and two fons — my grandfather Edward, who was born in the year 1666, and Thomas, afterwards Dean of Carlifle. According to the mercantile creed, that the best book is a profitable ledger, the writings of John the herald would be much less precioes, than those of his nephew Edward: but an author profession at least to write for the public benefit; and the flow balance of trade can be pleafing to those perfons only, to whom it is advantageous. The fuccefsful industry of my grandfather raifed him above the level of his immediate anceftors; he appears to have launched into various and extensive dealings: even his opinions were fubordinate to his intereft; and I find him in Flanders clothing King William's troops, while he would have contracted with more pleafure, though not perhaps at a cheaper rate, for the fervice of King James. During his refidence abroad, his concerns at home were managed by his mother Hefter, an active and notable woman. Her fecond hufband was a widower, of the name of Acton: they united the children of their first nuptials. After his marriage with the daughter of Richard Acton, goldimith in Leadenhall-ftreet, he gave his own fifter to Sir Whitmore Acton, of Aldenham: and I am thus connected, by a triple alliance, with that ancient and loyal family of Shropshire baronets. It confifted about that time of feven brothers, all of gigantic stature; one of whom, a pigmy of fix feet two inches, confessed himself the last and least of the feven; adding, in the true fpirit of party, that fuch men were not born fince the Revolution. Under the Tory administration of the four last years of Oueen Anne (1710-1714) Mr. Edward Gibbon was appointed one of the Commissioners of the Customs; he fat at that Board with Prior: but the merchant was better qualified for his ftation than the poet; fince Lord Bolingbroke has been heard to declare, that he had never converfed with a man, who more clearly underftood the commerce and finances of England. In the year 1716 he was elected one of the Directors of the South Sea Company; and his books exhibited the proof that, before his acceptance of this fatal office, he had acquired an independent fortune of fixty thousand pounds.

12

13

But his fortune was overwhelmed in the fhipwreck of the year twenty, and the labors of thirty years were blafted in a fingle day. Of the ufe or abufe of the South Sea fcheme, of the guilt or innocence of my grandfather and his brother Directors, I am neither a competent nor a difinterefted judge. Yet the equity of modern times must condemn the violent and arbitrary proceedings, which would have difgraced the caufe of juffice, and would render injustice still more odious. No fooner had the nation awakened from its golden dream, than a popular and even a parliamentary clamor demanded their victims: but it was acknowledged on all fides that the South Sea Directors, however guilty could not be touched by any known laws of the lands. The fpeech of Lord Molefworth, the author of the State of Denmark, may flow the temper, or rather the intemperance, of the Houfe of Commons. "Extra-" ordinary crimes (exclaimed that ardent Whig) call " aloud for extraordinary remedies. The Roman " lawgivers had not forefeen the poffible exiftence " of a parricide: but as foon as the first monster ap-" peared, he was fown in a fack, and caft headlong " into the river; and I shall be content to inflict the " fame treatment on the authors of our prefent ruin." His motion was not literally adopted; but a bill of pains and penalties was introduced, a retroactive

urn:nbn:de:abv:3:1-700122-p0033-5

14

ftatute, to punish the offences, which did not exift at the time they were committed. Such a pernicious violation of liberty and law can be excufed only by the most imperious necessity; nor could it be defended on this occasion by the plea of impending danger or ufeful example. The legiflature reftrained the perfons of the Directors, imposed an exorbitant fecurity for their appearance, and marked their characters with a previous note of ignominy: they were compelled to deliver, upon oath, the frict value of their eftates ; and were difabled from making any transfer or alienation of any part of their property. Against a bill of pains and penalties it is the common right of every fubject to be heard by his counfel at the bar: they prayed to be heard; their prayer was refufed; and their oppreffors, who required no evidence, would liften to no defence. It had been at first proposed that one eighth of their respective estates should be allowed for the future fupport of the Directors; but it was fpecioufly urged, that in the various shades of opulence and guilt such an unequal proportion would be too light for many, and for fome might poffibly be too heavy. The character and conduct of each man were feparately weighed; but, inftead of the calm folemnity of a judicial inquiry, the fortune and honor of three-andthirty Englishmen were made the topic of hafty converfation, the fport of a lawlefs majority; and the baseft member of the committee, by a malicious word or a filent vote, might indulge his general fpleen or perfonal animofity. Injury was aggravated by infult, and infult was embittered by pleafantry.

15

Allowances of twenty pounds, or one fhilling, were facetioufly moved. A vague report that a Director had formerly been concerned in another project, by which fome unknown perfons had loft their money, was admitted as a proof of his actual guilt. One man was ruined becaufe he had dropt a foolifh fpeech, that his horfes flould feed upon gold ; another becaufe he was grown fo proud, that, one day at the Treasury, he had refused a civil answer to perfons much above him. All were condemned, abfent and unheard, in arbitrary fines and forfeitures, which fwept away the greateft part of their fubftance. Such bold oppreffion can fcarcely be fhielded by the omnipotence of parliament: and yet it may be ferioufly queftioned, whether the Judges of the South Sea Directors were the true and legal reprefentatives of their country. The first parliament of George the First had been chofen (1715) for three years: the term had elapfed, their truft was expired; and the four additional years (1718-1722), during which they continued to fit, were derived not from the people, but from themfelves ; from the ftrong measure of the feptennial bill, which can only be paralleled by il ferrar di configlio of the Venetian history. Yet candor will own that to the fame parliament every Englifhman is deeply indebted : the feptennial act, fo vicious in its origin, has been fanctioned by time, experience, and the national confent. Its first operation fecured the Houfe of Hanover on the throne, and its permanent influence maintains the peace and stability of government. As often as a repeal has been moved in the Houfe of Commons, I have given in its defence a clear and confcientious vote.

16

My grandfather could not expect to be treated with more lenity than his companions. His Tory principles and connexions rendered him obnoxious to the ruling powers: his name is reported in a fufpicious fecret; and his well known abilities could not plead the excuse of ignorance or error. In the first proceedings against the South Sea Directors. Mr. Gibbon is one of the few who were taken into cuftody; and, in the final fentence, the measure of his fine proclaims him eminently guilty. The total eftimate which he delivered on oath to the House of Commons' amounted to one hundred and fix thousand five hundred and forty-three pounds five fbillings and fixpence, exclusive of antecedent fettlements. Two different allowances of fifteen and of ten thousand pounds were moved for Mr. Gibbon: but, on the question being put, it was carried without a division for the smaller sum. On these ruins with the skill and credit, of which parliament had not been able to defpoil him, my grandfather at a mature age erected the edifice of a new fortune : the labors of fixteen years were amply rewarded; and I have reafon to believe that the fecond ftructure was not much inferior to the first. He had realized a very confiderable property in Suffex, Hampfhire, Buckinghamshire, and the New River Company; and had acquired a spacious house', with gardens and lands, at Putney, in Surry, where he refided in decent hospitality. He died in December 1736, at the age of feventy; and his laft will, at the expense of Edward,

19

Edward, his only fon, (with whofe marriage he was not perfectly reconciled,) enriched his two daughters, Catherine and Hefter. The former became the wife of Mr. Edward Ellifton, an Eaft India captain: their daughter and heirefs Catherine was married in the year 1756 to Edward Eliot efg. (now Lord Eliot). of Port Eliot, in the county of Cornwall; and their three fons are my nearest male relations on the father's fide. A life of devotion and celibacy was the choice of my aunt, Mrs. Hefter Gibbon, who, at the age of eighty-five, still refides in a hermitage at Cliffe, in Northamptonfhire ; having long furvived her fpiritual guide and faithful companion Mr. William Law, who, at an advanced age, about the year 1761, died in her houfe. In our family he had left the reputation of a worthy and pious man, who believed all that he profeffed, and practifed all that he enjoined. I he character of a nonjuror, which he maintained to the last, is a fufficient evidence of his principles in church and ftate; and the facrifice of intereft to confcience will be always respectable. His theological writings, which our domeflic connexion has tempted me to perufe, preferve an imperfect fort of life, and I can pronounce with more confidence and knowledge on the merits of the author. His laft compositions are darkly tinctured by the incomprehenfible visions of Jacob Behmen; and his discourse on the absolute unlawfulnels of stageentertainments is sometimes quoted for a ridiculous intemperance of fentiment and language. --- " The " actors and spectators must all be damaed : the play-" house is the porch of Hell, the place of the Devil's " abode, where he holds his filthy court of evil VOL. I. C

12

" fpirits : a play is the Devil's triumph, a facrifice " performed to his glory, as much as in the heathen " temples of Bacchus or Venus, &c. &c. " But thefe fallies of religious phrenfy must not extinguish the praife, which is due to Mr. William Law as a wit and a fcholar. His argument on topics of lefs abfurdity is specious and acute, his manner is lively, his ftyle forcible and clear; and, had not his vigorous mind been clouded by enthuliafm, he might be ranked with the most agreeable and ingenious writers of the times. While the Bangorian controverly was a fashionable theme, he entered the lifts on the fubject of Chrift's kingdom, and the authority of the priefthood : against the plain account of the facrament of the Lord's Supper he refumed the combat with Bifhop Hoadley, the object of Whig idolatry, and Tory abhorrence; and at every weapon of attack and defence the nonjuror, on the ground which is common to both, approves himfelf at least equal to the prelate. On the appearance of the Fable of the Bees, he drew his pen against the licentious doctrine that private vices are public benefits, and morality as well as religion must join in his applause. Mr. Law's master-work, the Serious Call, is still read as a popular and powerful book of devotion. His precepts are rigid, but they are founded on the gofpel: his fatire is tharp, but it is drawn from the knowledge of human life; and many of his portraits are not unworthy of the pen of La Bruyere. If he finds a fpark of piety in his reader's mind, he will foon kindle it to a flame; and a philosopher must allow that he exposes, with equal feverity and truth, the ftrange contradiction between the faith and practice of the Christian world. Under the names of Flavia and Miranda he has admirably defcribed my two aunts—the heathen and the christian fister.

19

My father, Edward Gibbon, was born in October 1707: at the age of thirteen he could fcarcely feel that he was difinherited by act of parliament; and, as he advanced towards manhood, new profpects of fortune opened to his view. A parent is moft attentive to fupply in his children the deficiencies, of which he is confcious in himfelf: my grandfather's knowledge was derived from a ftrong understanding. and the experience of the ways of men ; but my father enjoyed the benefits of a liberal education'as a scholar and a gentleman. At Westminster School. and afterwards at Emanuel College in Cambridge, he paffed through a regular courfe of academical difcipline; and the care of his learning and morals was intrusted to his private tutor, the fame Mr. William Law. But the mind of a faint is above or below the prefent world; and while the pupil proceeded on his travels, the tutor remained at Putney, the muchhonored friend and fpiritual director of the whole family. My father refided fome time at Paris to acquire the fashionable exercises; and as his temper was warm and focial, he indulged in those pleasures, for which the firiciness of his former education had given him a keener relifh. He afterwards vifited feveral provinces of France; but his excursions were neither long nor remote; and the flender knowledge, which he had gained of the French language, was gradually obliterated. His paffage through Befançon is marked by a fingular confequence in the chain of human events. In a dangerous illnefs Mr. Gibbon was attended, at his own requeft, by one of his kinfmen of the name of Acton, the younger brother of a younger brother, who had applied himfelf to the fludy of phyfic. During the flow recovery of his patient, the phyfician himfelf was attacked by the malady of love: he married his miftrefs, renounced his country and religion, fettled at Befancon, and became the father of three fons; the eldeft of whom, General Acton, is confpicuous in Europe as the principal Minister of the King of the Two Sicilies. By an uncle whom another ftroke of fortune had transplanted to Leghorn, he was educated in the naval fervice f the Emperor; and his valor and conduct in the command of the Tufcan frigates protected the retreat of the Spaniards from Algiers. On my father's return to England he was chosen. in the general election of 1734, to ferve in parliament for the borough of Petersfield; a burgage tenure, of which my grandfather poffeffed a weighty fhare, till he alienated (I know not why) fuch important property. In the opposition to Sir Robert Walpole and the Pelhams, prejudice and fociety connected his fon with the Tories, - fhall I fay Jacobites ? or, as they were pleafed to ftyle themfelves, the country gentlemen? with them he gave many a vote; with them he drank many a bottle. Without acquiring the fame of an orator or a statesman, he eagerly joined in the great opposition, which, after a feven years chafe, hunted down Sir Robert Walpole : and in the purfuit of an unpopular minister, he gratified a private revenge against the oppressor of his family in the South Sea perfecution.

C 2

20

21

I was born at Putney, in the county of Surry, the 27th of April, O. S. in the year one thousand feven hundred and thirty feven ; the first child of the marriage of Edward Gibbon elq. and of Judith Porten *. My lot might have been that of a flave, a favage, or a peafant; nor can I reflect without pleafure on the bounty of Nature, which caft my birth in a free and civilized country, in an age of fcience and philofophy, in a family of honorable rank, and decently endowed with the gifts of fortune. From my birth I have enjoyed the right of primogeniture; but I was fucceeded by five brothers and one fifter, all of whom were fnatched away in their infancy. My five brothers, whofe names may be found in the parifh regifter of Putney, I fhall not pretend to lament: but from my childhood to the prefent hour I have deeply and fincerely regretted my fifter, whole life was fomewhat prolonged, and whom I remember to have feen an amiable infant. The relation of a brother and a fifter, especially if they do not marry, appears to me of a very fingular nature. It is a familiar and tender friendship with a female, much about our own age; an affection perhaps foftened by the fecret influence of fex, but pure from any mixture of fenfual defire, the fole species of Platonic love that can be indulged with truth, and without danger.

At the general election of 1741, Mr. Gibbon and Mr. Delmé ftood an expensive and successful contest at Southampton, against Mr. Dummer and Mr. Henly, afterwards Lord Chancellor and Earl of Northington. The Whig candidates had a majority of the relident voters ; but the corporation was firm in the Tory interest: a sudden creation of one hundred and feventy new freemen turned the fcale : and a fupply was readily obtained of respectable volunteers. who flocked from all parts of England to fupport the caufe of their political friends. The new parliament opened with the victory of an opposition, which was fortified by ftrong clamor and ftrange coalitions. From the event of the first divisions, Sir Robert Walpole perceived that he could no longer lead a majority in the Houfe of Commons, and prudently religned (after a dominion of one-and-twenty years) the guidance of the flate (1742). But the fall of an unpopular minister was not succeeded, according to general expectation, by a millennium of happinefs and virtue : fome courtiers loft their places, fome patriots loft their characters, Lord Orford's offences vanished with his power, and after a fhort vibration. the Pelham government was fixed on the old bafis of the Whig ariftocracy. In the year 1745, the throne and the conflitution were attacked by a rebellion. which does not reflect much honor on the national fpirit: fince the English friends of the Pretender wanted courage to join his ftandard, and his enemies (the bulk of the people) allowed him to advance into the heart of the kingdom. Without daring, perhaps without defiring, to aid the rebels, my father invariably adhered to the Tory opposition. In the most critical feafon he accepted, for the fervice of the party, the office of alderman in the city of London : but the duties were fo repugnant to his inclination and habits, that he refigned his gown at the end of a few months. The fecond parliament in which he fat was prematurely diffolved (1747): and as he was unable or unwilling to maintain a fecond conteft for Southampton, the life of the fenator expired in that diffolution.

C 3

22

The death of a new-born child before that of its parents may feem an unnatural, but it is ftrictly a probable, event: fince of any given number the greater part are extinguifhed before their ninth year, before they poffefs the faculties of the mind or body. Without accufing the profufe wafte or imperfects workmanfhip of Nature, 1 fhall only obferve, that this unfavorable chance was multiplied againft my infant exiftence. So feeble was my conflitution, fo precarious my life, that, in the baptifm of each of my brothers, my father's prudence fucceffively repeated my chriftian name of Edward, that, in cafe of the departure of the eldeft fon, this patronymick appellation might be ftill perpetuated in the family.

- Uno avulfo non deficit alter.

To preferve and to rear fo frail a being, the molt tender affiduity was fcarcely fufficient; and my mother's attention was fomewhat diverted by hes frequent pregnancies, by an exclusive paffion for her hufband, and by the diffipation of the world, in which his tafte and authority obliged her to mingle. But the maternal office was fupplied by my aunt, Mrs. Catherine Porten; at whofe name I feel a tear of gratitude trickling down my cheek. A life of celibacy transferred her vacant affection to her fifter's firft child: my weaknefs excited her pity; her attachment was fortified by labor and fuccels: and if there be any, as I truft there are fome, who rejoice that I live. to that dear and excellent woman they muft hold themfelves indebted. Many anxious and folitary days did the confume in the patient trial of every mode of relief and amusement. Many wakeful nights did fhe fit by my bed-fide in trembling expectation that each hour would be my laft. Of the various and frequent diforders of my childhood my own recollection is dark; nor do I wilh to expatiate on fo difgufting a topic. Suffice it to fay, that while every practitioner, from Sloane and Ward to the Chevalier Taylor, was fucceffively fummoned to torture or relieve me, the care of my mind was too frequently neglected for that of my health: compaffion always fuggested an excuse for the indulgence of the master. or the idleness of the pupil; and the chain of my education was broken, as often as I was recalled from the fchool of learning to the bed of ficknefs.

C 4

24

As foon as the ufe of fpeech had prepared my infant reafon for the admiffion of knowledge, I was taught the arts of reading, writing, and arithmetic. So remote is the date, fo vague is the memory of their origin in myfelf, that, were not the error corrected by analogy, I fhould be tempted to conceive them as innate. In my childhood I was praifed for the readinefs, with which I could multiply and divide, by memory alone, two fums of feveral figures: fuch praife encouraged my growing talent; and had I perfevered in this line of application, I might have acquired fome fame in mathematical ftudies.

After this previous institution at home, or at a day-

25

fchool at Putney, I was delivered at the age of feven into the hands of Mr. John Kirkby, who exercifed about eighteen months the office of my domeftic tutor. His own words, which I thall here transcribe. infpire in his favor a fentiment of pity and efteem. --" During my abode in my native county of Cumber-" land, in quality of an indigent curate, I used now-" and-then in a Summer, when the pleafantnefs of " the feafon invited, to take a folitary walk to the " fea-fhore, which lies about two miles from the " town where I lived. Here I would amuse myself. " one while in viewing at large the agreeable profpect " which furrounded me, and another while (confi-" ning my fight to nearer objects) in admiring the " vaft variety of beautiful fhells, thrown upon the " beach; fome of the choiceft of which I always " picked up, to divert my little ones upon my return. " One time among the reft, taking fuch a journey " in my head, I fat down upon the declivity of the " beach with my face to the fea, which was now " come up within a few yards of my feet; when im-" mediately the fad thoughts of the wretched condi-" tion of my family, and the unfuccefsfulnels of all " endeavours to amend it, came crowding into my " mind, which drove me into a deep melancholy, " and ever and anon forced tears from my eyes." Diftrefs at last forced him to leave the country. His learning and virtue introduced him to my father; and at Putney he might have found at least a temporary shelter, had not an act of indifcretion again driven him into the world. One day reading prayers in the parifh church, he most unluckily forgot the name of

26

King George : his patron, a loyal fubject. difmiffed him with fome reluctance, and a decent reward; and how the poor man ended his days I have never been able to learn. Mr. John Kirkby is the author of two fmall volumes; the Life of Automathes (London, 1745), and an English and Latin Grammar (London, 1746); which, as a teftimony of gratitude. he dedicated (November 5th, 1745) to my father. The books are before me: from them the pupil may judge the preceptor; and, upon the whole, his judgment will not be unfavorable. The grammar is executed with accuracy and fkill, and I know not whether any better exifted at the time in our language: but the life of Automathes afpires to the honors of a philosophical fiction. It is the ftory of a youth, the fon of a fhipwrecked exile, who lives alone on a defert ifland from infancy to the age of manhood. A hind is his nurfe ; he inherits a cottage. with many useful and curious inftruments; fome ideas remain of the education of his two first years; fome arts are borrowed from the beavers of a neighbouring lake; fome truths are revealed in fupernatural vifions. With these helps, and his own industry, Automathes becomes a felf-taught though fpeechlefs philofopher, who had inveftigated with fuccefs his own mind, the natural world, the abstract fciences, and the great principles of morality and religion. The author is not entitled to the merit of invention, fince he has blended the English story of Robinson Crusoe with the Arabian romance of Hai Ebn Yokhdan, which he might have read in the Latin verfion of Pocock. In the Automathes I cannot praife either the depth of thought or elegance of ftyle; but the book is not devoid of entertainment or inftruction; and among feveral interefting paffages, I would felect the difcovery of fire, which produces by accidental mifchief the difcovery of confcience. A man who had thought fo much on the fubjects of language and education was furely no ordinary preceptor: my childifh years, and his hafty departure, prevented me from enjoying the full benefit of his leffons; but they enlarged my knowledge of arithmetic, and left me a clear imprefilion of the Englifh and Latin rudiments.

27

In my ninth year (January 1746), in a lucid interval of comparative health, my father adopted the convenient and cuftomary mode of English education ; and I was fent to Kingston upon Thames, to a fchool of about feventy boys, which was kept by Dr. Wooddeson and his affistants. Every time I have fince paffed over Putney Common, I have always noticed the fpot where my mother, as we drove along in the coach, admonished me that I was now going into the world, and must learn to think and act for myfelf. The expression may appear ludicrous; yet there is not, in the course of life, a more remarkable change than the removal of a child from the luxury and freedom of a wealthy house, to the frugal diet and ftrict fubordination of a fchool; from the tendernefs of parents, and the obsequiousnefs of fervants, to the rude familiarity of his equals, the infolent tyranny of his feniors, and the rod, perhaps, of a cruel and capricious pedagogue. Such hardfhips may feel the mind and body against the injuries of fortune; but my timid referve was aftonifhed by the crowd and tumult of the school; the want of ftrength and activity difgualified me for the fports of the playfield ; nor have I forgotten how often in the year forty - fix I was reviled and buffetted for the fins of my Tory anceftors. By the common methods of difcipline, at the expense of many tears and fome blood, I purchafed the knowledge of the Latin fyntax: and not long fince I was poffeffed of the dirty volumes of Phædrus and Cornelius Nepos, which I painfully construed and darkly understood. The choice of thefe authors is not injudicious. The lives of Cornelius Nepos, the friend of Atticus and Cicero, are compoled in the ftyle of the pureft age: his fimplicity is elegant, his brevity copious : he exhibits a feries of men and manners; and with fuch illustrations, as every pedant is not indeed qualified to give, this claffic biographer may initiate a young ftudent in the history of Greece and Rome. The use of fables or apologues has been approved in every age from ancient India to modern Europe. They convey in familiar images the truths of morality and prudence; and the most childish understanding (I advert to the fcruples of Rouffeau) will not fuppole either that beafts do speak, or that men may lie. A fable reprefents the genuine characters of animals; and a skilful mafter might extract from Pliny and Buffon fome pleafing leffons of natural hiftory, a fcience well adapted to the tafte and capacity of children. The Latinity of Phædrus is not exempt from an alloy of the filver age: but his manner is concife, terfe, and fententious : the Thracian flaye difcreetly breathes

28

20

the fpirit of a freeman; and when the text is found, the flyle is perfpicuous. But his fables, after a long oblivion, were first published by Peter Pithou from a corrupt manufcript. The labors of fifty editors confess the defects of the copy, as well as the value of the original; and the school - boy may have been whipt for misapprehending a passage, which Bentley could not restore, and which Burman could not explain.

My studies were too frequently interrupted by fickness; and after a real or nominal refidence at Kingfton - fcbool of near two years, I was finally recalled (December 1747) by my mother's death, which was occafioned, in her thirty eighth year. by the confequences of her laft labor. I was too young to feel the importance of my lofs; and the image of her perfon and converfation is faintly imprinted in my memory. The affectionate heart of my aunt. Catherine Porten, bewailed a fifter and a friend; but my poor father was inconfolable. and the transport of grief feemed to threaten his life or his reafon. I can never forget the scene of our first interview, some weeks after the fatal event; the awful filence, the room hung with black, the mid-day tapers, his fighs and tears; his praifes of my mother, a faint in heaven; his folemn adjuration that I would cherifh her memory and imitate her virtues; and the fervor with which he kiffed and bleffed me as the fole furviving pledge of their loves. The ftorm of paffion infenfibly fubfided into calmer melancholy. At a convivial meeting of his friends, Mr. Gibbon might affect or enjoy a gleam of cheerfulnefs; but his plan of happinefs was for ever deftroyed : and after the lofs of his companion he was left alone in a world, of which the bufinefs and pleafures were to him irkfome or infipid. After fome unfuccefsful trials he renounced the tumult of London and the hofpitality of Putney, and buried himfelf in the rural or rather ruftic folitude of Buriton; from which, during feveral years, he feldom emerged.

30

As far back as I can remember, the houfe, near Putney-bridge and church-yard, of my maternal grandfather appears in the light of my proper and native home. It was there that I was allowed to fpend the greateft part of my time, in fickness or in health. during my fchool-vacations and my parents refidence in London, and finally after my mother's death. Three months after that event, in the fpring of 1748, the commercial ruin of her father, Mr. James Porten, was accomplifhed and declared. He fuddenly absconded : but as his effects were not fold. nor the house evacuated, till the Christmas following, I enjoyed during the whole year the fociety of my aunt, without much confciousness of her impending fate. I feel a melancholy pleafure in repeating my obligations to that excellent woman, Mrs. Catherine Porten, the true mother of my mind as well as of my health. Her natural good fenfe was improved by the perufal of the best books in the English language. and if her reafon was fometimes clouded by prejudice, her fentiments were never difguifed by hypocrify or affectation. Her indulgent tendernefs, the franknefs of her temper, and my innate rifing suriofity, foon removed all diftance between us :

like friends of an equal age, we freely converfed on every topic, familiar or abstruse; and it was her delight and reward to observe the first shoots of my young ideas. Pain and languor were often foothed by the voice of inftruction and amufement; and to her kind leffons I afcribe my early and invincible love of reading, which I would not exchange for the treafures of India, I fhould perhaps be aftonifhed , were it possible to afcertain the date, at which a favorite tale was engraved, by frequent repetition, in my memory: the Cavern of the Winds ; the Palace of Felicity; and the fatal moment, at the end of three months or centuries, when Prince Adolphus is overtaken by Time, who had worn out fo many pair of wings in the purfuit. Before I left Kingfton fchool I was well acquainted with Pope's Homer and the Arabian Nights Entertainments, two books which will always pleafe by the moving picture of human manners and fpecious miracles : nor was I then capable of difcerning that Pope's translation is a portrait endowed with every merit, excepting that of likeness to the original. The verses of Pope accustomed my ear to the found of poetic harmony : in the death of Hector, and the fhipwreck of Ulyfies, I tafted the new emotions of terror and pity; and ferioufly difputed with my aunt on the vices and virtues of the heroes of the Trojan war. From Pope's Homer to Dryden's Virgil was an eafy transition; but I know not how, from fome fault in the author, the translator, or the reader, the pious Eneas did not fo forcibly feize on my imagination; and I derived more pleafure from Ovid's Metamorpholes, espe28

cially in the fall of Phæton, and the fpeeches of Ajax and Ulyffes. My grandfather's flight unlocked the door of a tolerable library; and I turned over many Englifh pages of poetry and romance, of hiftory and travels. Where a title attracted my eye, without fear or awe I fnatched the volume from the fhelf; and Mrs. Porten, who indulged herfelf in moral and religious fpeculations, was more prone to encourage than to check a curiofity above the ftrength of a boy. This year (1748), the twelfth of my age, I fhall note as the moft propitious to the growth of my intellectual ftature.

The relics of my grandfather's fortune afforded a bare annuity for his own maintenance; and his daughter, my worthy aunt, who had already paffed her fortieth year, was left destitute. Her noble fpirit fcorned a life of obligation and dependence; and after revolving feveral fchemes, fhe preferred the humble industry of keeping a boarding-house for Westminster-school', where she laboriously earned a competence for her old age. This fingular opportunity of blending the advantages of private and public education decided my father. After the Chriftmas holidays in January 1749, I accompanied Mrs. Porten to her new houfe in College - ftreet ; and was immediately entered in the fchool, of which Dr. John Nicoll was at that time head-mafter. At first I was alone : but my aunt's refolution was praifed ; her character was efteemed ; her friends were numerous and active: in the course of some years the became the mother of forty or fifty boys, for the most part of family and fortune ; and as her primitive habitation

33

tion was too narrow, the built and occupied a spacious manfion in Dean's Yard. I fhall always be ready to join in the common opinion, that our public fchools, which have produced fo many eminent characters, are the best adapted to the genius and constitution of the English people. A boy of spirit may acquire a previous and practical experience of the world; and his playfellows may be the future friends of his heart or his intereft. In a free intercourfe with his equals, the habits of truth, fortitude, and prudence will infenfibly be matured. Birth and riches are meafured by the ftandard of perfonal merit; and the mimic fcene of a rebellion has difplayed, in their true colors, the ministers and patriots of the rifing generation, Our feminaries of learning do not exactly correspond with the precept of a Spartan king, " that the child " fhould be inftructed in the arts, which will be " uleful to the man;" fince a finished scholar may emerge from the head of Weftminster or Eton, in total ignorance of the bufinefs and converfation of English gentlemen in the latter end of the eighteenth century. But these schools may affume the merit of teaching all that they pretend to teach, the Latin and Greek languages : they deposit in the hands of a disciple the keys of two valuable chefts; nor can he complain, if they are afterwards loft or neglected by his own fault. The neceffity of leading in equal ranks fo many unequal powers of capacity and application, will prolong to eight or ten years the juvenile ftudies, which might be dispatched in half that time by the fkilful mafter of a fingle pupil. Yet even the repetition of exercife and discipline contributes to fix in a vacant mind the verbal fcience of grammar and profody : and the private or voluntary fludent . who poffeffes the fenfe and fpirit of the claffics, may offend, by a falle quantity, the forupulous ear of a well-flogged critic. For myfelf, I must be content with a very fmall fhare of the civil and literary fruits of a public fchool. In the space of two years (1749 -1750), interrupted by danger and debility, I painfully climbed into the third form ; and my riper age was left to acquire the beauties of the Latin, and the rudiments of the Greek tongue. Inflead of audacioufly mingling in the fports, the quarrels, and the connexions of our little world, I was ftill cherifhed at home under the maternal wing of my aunt; and my removal from Westminster long preceded the approach of manhood.

VOL. I.

34

The violence and variety of my complaints, which had exculed my frequent absence from Westminsterfchool, at length engaged Mrs. Porten, with the advice of phyficians, to conduct me to Bath: at the end of the Michaelmas-vacation (1750) fhe quitted me with reluctance, and I remained feveral months under the care of a trufty maid-fervant. A ftrange nervous affection, which alternately contracted my legs, and produced, without any vilible fymptoms, the most excruciating pain, was ineffectually opposed by the various methods of bathing and pumping. From Bath I was transported to Winchefter, to the house of a physician; and after the failure of his medical skill, we had again recourse to the virtues of the Bath waters. During the intervals of thefe fits, I moved with my father to Buriton and Putney; and a fhort unfuccefsful trial was attempted to renew my attendance at Westminster school. But my infirmities could not be reconciled with the hours and difcipline of a public feminary; and inftead of a domeftic tutor, who might have watched the favorable moments, and gently advanced the progrefs of my learning, my father was too eafily content with fuch occafional teachers, as the different places of my refidence could fupply. I was never forced, and feldom was I perfuaded, to admit thefe leffons : yet I read with a clergyman at Bath fome odes of Horace. and feveral epifodes of Virgil, which gave me an imperfect and transient enjoyment of the Latin poets. It might now be apprehended that I fould continue for life an illiterate cripple : but, as I approached my fixteenth year, Nature displayed in my favor her mysterious energies: my constitution was fortified and fixed; and my diforders, inflead of growing with my growth and ftrengthening with my ftrength, most wonderfully vanished. I have never poffeffed or abufed the infolence of health: but fince that time few perfons have been more exempt from real or imaginary ills; and, till I am admonifhed by the gout, the reader will no more be troubled with the history of my bodily complaints. My unexpected recovery again encouraged the hope of my education; and I was placed at Efher, in Surry, in the houfe of the Reverend Mr. Philip Francis, in a pleafant fpot, which promifed to unite the various benefits of air, exercife, and fludy (January 1752). The translator of Horace might have taught me to relifh the Latin poets, had not my friends difcovered in a few weeks, that he preferred the pleafures of London, to the inftruction of his pupils. My father's perplexity at this time, rather than his prudence, was urged to embrace a fingular and defperate meafure. Without preparation or delay he carried me to Oxford; and I was matriculated in the univerfity as a gentleman commoner of Magdalen college, before I had accomplified the fifteenth year of my age (April 3,1752).

25

D 2

26

The curiofity, which had been implanted in my infant mind, was still alive and active: but my reason was not fufficiently informed to understand the value, or to lament the loss, of three precious years from my entrance at Westminster to my admission at Oxford. Inftead of repining at my long and frequent confinement to the chamber or the couch. I fecretly rejoiced in those infirmities, which delivered me from the exercifes of the fchool, and the fociety of my equals. As often as I was tolerably exempt from danger and pain, reading, free defultory reading, was the employment and comfort of my folitary hours. At Westminster, my aunt fought only to amuse and indulge me; in my stations at Bath and Winchester, at Buriton and Putney, a falle compatiion respected my fufferings; and I was allowed, without control or advice, to gratify the wanderings of an unripe tafte. My indifcriminate appetite fublided by degrees in the hiftoric line : and fince philosophy has exploded all innate ideas and natural propenfities, I muft afcribe this choice to the affiduous perufal of the Univerfal Hiftory, as the octavo volumes fucceffively appeared. This unequal work, and a a treatife of Hearne, the Ductor historicus, referred and introduced me to the Greek and Roman historians, to as many at leaft as were acceffible to an English reader. All that I could find were greedily devoured, from Littlebury's lame Herodotus, and Spelman's valuable Xenophon, to the pompous folios of Gordon's Tacitus, and a ragged Procopius of the beginning of the laft century. The cheap acquisition of fo much knowledge confirmed my diflike to the fludy of languages; and I argued with Mrs. Porten, that, were Imaster of Greek and Latin, I must interpret to myfelf in English the thoughts of the original, and that fuch extemporary verfions must be inferior to the elaborate translations of professed scholars; a filly fophifm, which could not eafily be confuted by a perfon ignorant of any other language than her own. From the ancient I leaped to the modern world : many crude lumps of Speed, Rapin, Mezeray, Davila. Machiavel, Father Paul, Bower, &c. I devoured like fo many novels; and I fwallowed with the fame voracious appetite the defcriptions of India and China, of Mexico and Peru.

37

My first introduction to the historic feenes, which have fince engaged fo many years of my life, must be afcribed to an accident. In the fummer of 1751, I accompanied my father on a visit to Mr. Hoare's, in Wiltshire; but I was less delighted with the beauties of Stourhead, than with discovering in the library a common book, the Continuation of Echard's Roman History, which is indeed executed with more fkill and tafte than the previous work. To me the reigns of the fucceffors of Constantine were absolutely mew; and I was immerfed in the passage of the Goths over the Danube, when the fummons of the dinnerbell reluctantly dragged me from my intellectual feaft. This transfient glance ferved rather to irritate than to appeale my curiofity; and as foon as I returned to Bath I procured the fecond and third volumes of Howel's Hiftory of the World, which exhibit the Byzantine period on a larger fcale. Mahomet and his Saracens foon fixed my attention; and fome inftinct of criticism directed me to the genuine fources. Simon Ockley, an original in every fenfe, first opened my eyes; and I was led from one book to another. till I had ranged round the circle of Oriental hiftory. Before I was fixteen, I had exhausted all that could be learned in English of the Arabs and Persians, the Tartars and Turks; and the fame ardor urged me to guels at the French of D'Herbelot, and to conftrue the barbarous Latin of Pocock's Abulfaragius. Such vague and multifarious reading could not teach me to think, to write, or to act; and the only principle, that darted a ray of light into the indigefied chaos. was an early and rational application to the order of time and place. The maps of Cellarius and Wells imprinted in my mind the picture of ancient geography : from Stranchius I imbibed the elements of chrono. logy: the Tables of Helvicus and Anderfon, the Annals of Ufher and Prideaux, diftinguifhed the connexion of events, and engraved the multitude of names and dates in a clear and indelible feries. But in the difcuffion of the first ages I overleaped the bounds of modefty and use. In my childish balance I prefumed to weigh the fystems of Scaliger and Petavius, of Marsham and Newton, which I could feldom study in the originals; and my fleep has been diffurbed by the difficulty of reconciling the Septuagint with the Hebrew computation. I arrived at Oxford with a flock of erudition, that might have puzzled a doctor, and a degree of ignorance, of which a fchool-boy would have been afhamed.

D 3

38

39

At the conclusion of this first period of my life, I am tempted to enter a proteft against the trite and lavish praise of the happiness of our boyish years, which is echoed with fo much affectation in the world. That happinefs I have never known, that time I have never regretted; and were my poor aunt ftill alive, fhe would bear testimony to the early and constant uniformity of my fentiments. It will indeed be replied, that I am not a competent judge ; that pleafure is incompatible with pain; that joy is excluded from ficknefs; and that the felicity of a fchool-boy confifts in the perpetual motion of thoughtlefs and playful agility, in which I was never qualified to excel. My name, it is most true, could never be enrolled among the fprightly race, the idle progeny of Eton or Weftminfter,

> Who foremost may delight to cleave, With pliant arm, the glaffy wave, Or urge the flying ball.

The poet may gaily defcribe the fhort hours of recreation; but he forgets the daily tedious labors of the fchool, which is approached each morning with anxious and reluctant fteps.

A traveller, who vifits Oxford or Cambridge, is furprifed and edified by the apparent order and tranquillity that prevail in the feats of the English mufes, In the most celebrated universities of Holland, Germany, and Italy, the ftudents, who fwarm from different countries ; are loofely difperfed in private lodgings at the houfes of the burghers : they drefs according to their fancy and fortune ; and in the intemperate quairels of youth and wine, their fwords. though lefs frequently than of old, are fometimes fained with each other's blood. The ufe of arms is banifhed from our English universities : the uniform habit of the academics, the fquare cap, and black gown, is adapted to the civil and even clerical profeffion ; and from the doctor in divinity to the undergraduate, the degrees of learning and age are externally diftinguished. Instead of being fcattered in a town, the fludents of Oxford and Cambridge are united in colleges; their maintenance is provided at their own expense, or that of the founders ; and the ftated hours of the hall and chapel reprefent the difcipline of a regular, and, as it were, a religious community. The eyes of the traveller are attracted by the fize or beauty of the public edifices; and the principal colleges appear to be fo many palaces, which a liberal nation has erected and endowed for the habitation of science. My own introduction to the univerfity of Oxford forms a new zera in my life ; and at the diftance of forty years I still remember my first emotions of furprife and fatisfaction. In my fifteenth year I felt myself fuddenly raifed from a boy to a man: the perfons, whom I refpected as my fuperiors in age and academical rank, entertained me with every mark of attention and civility; and my vanity was flattered by the velvet cap and filk gown, which diftinguish a gentleman commoner from a plebeian Rudent A decent allowance, more money than a fchool-boy had ever feen, was at my own difpofal; and I might command, among the tradefmen of Oxford, an indefinite and dangerous latitude of credit. A key was delivered into my hands, which gave me the free use of a numerous and learned library : my apartment confifted of three elegant and well furnished rooms in the new building, a stately pile, of Magdalen College; and the adjacent walks, had they been frequented by Plato's difciples, might have been compared to the Attic fhade on the banks of the Iliffus. Such was the fair prospect of my entrance (April 3, 1752) into the univerfity of Oxford.

 D_4

40

AT

A venerable prelate, whose tafte and erudition must reflect honor on the fociety in which they were formed, has drawn a very interefting picture of his academical life. - "I was educated (fays Bifhop " Lowth) in the UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD. I enjoyed " all the advantages, both public and private, which " that famous feat of learning fo largely affords. I " fpent many years in that illustrious fociety, in a " well-regulated courfe of ufeful difcipline and " ftudies, and in the agreeable and improving com-" merce of gentlemen and of fcholars; in a fociety " where emulation without envy, ambition without " jealoufy, contention without animofity, incited " industry, and awakened genius; where a liberal " purfuit of knowledge, and a genuine freedom of " thought, was raifed, encouraged, and pushed

42

" forward by example, by commendation, and by " authority. I breathed the fame atmosphere that " the HOOKERS, the CHILLINGWORTHS, and the " LOCKES had breathed before ; whole benevolence " and humanity were as extensive as their vast genius " and comprehensive knowledge; who always trea-" ted their adverfaries with civility and refpect; " who made candor, moderation, and liberal judge-" ment as much the rule and law as the fubject of " their discourse. And do you reproach me with " my education in this place, and with my relation " to this most respectable body, which I shall always " efteem my greateft advantage and my higheft " honor?" I transcribe with pleasure this eloquent paffage, without examining what benefits or what rewards were derived by Hooker, or Chillingworth, or Locke, from their academical inflitution ; without inquiring, whether in this angry controverfy the spirit of Lowth himself is purified from the intolerant zeal, which Warburton had afcribed to the genius of the place. It may indeed be observed, that the atmolphere of Oxford did not agree with Mr. Locke's constitution, and that the philosopher justly despifed the academical bigots, who expelled his perfon and condemned his principles. The expression of gratitude is a virtue and a pleafure: a liberal mind will delight to cherifh and celebrate the memory of its parents; and the teachers of fcience are the parents of the mind. I applaud the filial piety, which it is impoffible for me to imitate; fince I must not confess an imaginary debt, to affume the merit of a just or generous retribution. To the university of Oxford

43

I acknowledge no obligation ; and the will as cheerfully renounce me for a fon, as I am willing to difclaim her for a mother. I fpent fourteen months at Magdalen College; they proved the fourteen months the most idle and unprofitable of my whole life: the reader will pronounce between the fchool and the fcholar; but I cannot affect to believe that Nature had difqualified me for all literary purfuits. The fpecious and ready excufe of my tender age, imperfect preparation, and hafty departure, may doubtlefs be alledged; nor do I with to defraud fuch excufes of their proper weight. Yet in my fixteenth year I was not devoid of capacity or application ; even my childifh reading had difplayed an early though blind propenfity for books; and the fhallow flood might have been taught to flow in a deep channel and a clear ftream. In the difcipline of a well-conftituted academy, under the guidance of fkilful and vigilant professors, I should gradually have rifen from tranflations to originals, from the Latin to the Greek claffics, from dead langages to living fcience : my hours would have been occupied by uleful and agreeable studies, the wanderings of fancy would have been reftrained, and I fhould have escaped the temptations of idlenefs, which finally precipitated my departure from Oxford.

Perhaps in a feparate annotation I may coolly examine the fabulous and real antiquities of our fifter univerfities, a queftion which has kindled fuch fierce and foolifh difputes among their fanatic fons. In the mean while it will be acknowledged, that thefe venerable bodies are fufficiently old to partake of all the prejudices and infirmities of age. The fchools of Oxford and Cambridge were founded in a dark age of falfe and barbarous fcience; and they are fill tainted with the vices of their origin. Their primitive difcipline was adapted to the education of priefts and monks; and the government still remains in the hands of the clergy, an order of men whole manners are remote from the prefent world, and whofe eves are dazzled by the light of philosophy. The legal incorporation of these focieties by the charters of popes and kings had given them a monopoly of the public inftruction; and the fpirit of monopolifts is narrow, lazy, and oppreffive : their work is more coftly and lefs productive than that of independent artifts; and the new improvements fo eagerly grafped by the competition of freedom, are admitted with flow and fullen reluctance in those proud corporations, above the fear of a rival, and below the confession of an error. We may fcarcely hope that any reformation will be a voluntary act; and fo deeply are they rooted in law and prejudice, that even the omnipotence of parliament would fhrink from an inquiry into the ftate and abufes of the two univerfities.

44

The use of academical degrees, as old as the thirteenth century, is visibly borrowed from the mechanic corporations; in which an apprentice, after ferving his time, obtains a testimonial of his skill, and a licence to practife his trade and mystery. It is not my defign to depreciate those honors, which could never gratify or difappoint my ambition; and I should applaud the institution, if the degrees of bachelor or licentiate were beftowed as the reward of manly and fuccefsful ftudy : if the name and rank of doctor or mafter were ftricily referved for the profeffors of fcience, who have approved their title to the public efteem.

45

In the univerfities of Europe, excepting our own, the languages and fciences are diffributed among a numerous lift of effective profeffors: the fudents. according to their tafte, their calling, and their diligence, apply themfelves to the proper mafters; and in the annual repetition of public and private lectures, these masters are affiduoufly employed. Our curiofity may inquire what number of profeffors has been inftituted at Oxford ? (for I shall now confine myfelf to my own univerfity;) by whom are they appointed, and what may be the probable chances of merit or incapacity ? how many are ftationed to the three faculties, and how many are left for the liberal arts? what is the form, and what the substance, of their lessons? But all these questions are filenced by one fhort and fingular anfwer, " That " in the univerfity of Oxford, the greater part of " the public profeffors have for thefe many years " given up altogether even the pretence of teaching." Incredible as the fact may appear, I must reft my belief on the politive and impartial evidence of a mafter of moral and political wildom, who had himfelf refided at Oxford. Dr. Adam Smith affigns as the caufe of their indolence, that, inflead of being paid by voluntary contributions, which would urge them to increase the number, and to deferve the gratitude of their pupils, the Oxford professors are fecure in the enjoyment of a fixed flipend, without the neceffity of labor, or the apprehension of control. It has indeed been observed, nor is the observation abfurd, that excepting in experimental fciences, which demand a coffly apparatus and a dexterous hand, the many valuable treatifes, that have been published on every fubject of learning, may now superfede the ancient mode of oral instruction. Were this principle true in its utmost latitude. I should only infer that the offices and falaries, which are become useles, ought without delay to be abolifhed. But there still remains a material difference between a book and a profeffor; the hour of the lecture inforces attendance; attention is fixed by the prefence. the voice, and the occafional queftions of the teacher; the most idle will carry fomething away: and the more diligent will compare the inftructions , which they have heard in the fchool, with the vos lumes, which they peruse in their chamber. The advice of a fkilful professor will adapt a course of reading to every mind and every fituation; his authority will discover, admonish, and at last chastife the negligence of his difciples; and his vigilant inquiries will afcertain the fteps of their literary progrefs. Whatever fcience he profeffes he may illuftrate in a feries of difcourfes, composed in the leifure of his clofet, prononnced on public occasions, and finally delivered to the prefs. I observe with pleafure, that in the university of Oxford Dr. Lowth. with equal eloquence and erudition. has executed this talk in his incomparable Prelections on the Poetry of the Hebrews.

46

47

The college of St. Mary Magdalen was founded in the fifteenth century by Wainfleet bilhop of Winchefter; and now confifts of a prefident, forty fellows, and a number of inferior fludents. It is effeemed one of the largeft and most wealthy of our academical corporations, which may be compared to the Benedictine abbeys of catholic countries; and I have loofely heard that the effates belonging to Magdalen College, which are leafed by those indulgent landlords at fmall quit-rents and occafional fines, might be raifed, in the hands of private avarice, to an annual revenue of nearly thirty thousand pounds. Our colleges are fuppofed to be fchools of fcience, as well as of education ; nor is it unreafonable to expect that a body of literary men, devoted to a life of celibacy, exempt from the care of their own fubfiftence, and amply provided with books, fhould devote their leifure to the profecution of fludy, and that fome effects of their fludies should be manifested to the world. The shelves of their library groan under the weight of the Benedictine folios, of the editions of the fathers, and the collections of the middle ages, which have iffued from the fingle abbey of St. Germain de Prez at Paris. A composition of genius must be the offspring of one mind; but fuch works of industry, as may be divided among many hands, and must be continued during many years, are the peculiar province of a laborious community. If I inquire into the manufactures of the monks of Magdalen, if I extend the inquiry to the other colleges of Oxford and Cambridge, a filent blufh, or a fcornful frown, will be the only reply.

48

The fellows or monks of my time were decent eafy men, who fupinely enjoyed the gifts of the founder : their days were filled by a feries of uniform employments ; the chapel and the hall, the coffee house and the common room, till they retired, weary and well fatisfied, to a long flumber. From the toil of reading. or thinking, or writing, they had abfolved their confcience; and the first shoots of learning and ingenuity withered on the ground, without yielding any fruits to the owners or the public. As a gentleman commoner, I was admitted to the fociety of the fellows, and fondly expected that fome queftions of literature, would be the amufing and infructive topics of their difcourfe. Their converfation flagnated in a round of college bufinefs, Tory politics, perfonal anecdotes, and private fcandal: their dull and deep potations excufed the brifk intemperance of youth ; and their conftitutional toafts were not expressive of the most lively loyalty for the house of Hanover. A General election was now approaching : the great Oxford fhire contest already blazed with all the malevolence of party-zeal. Magdalen College was devoutly attached to the old intereft ! and the names of Wenman and Dafhwood were more frequently pronounced, than those of Cicero and Chrvfoftom. The example of the fenior fellows could not infpire the under graduates with a liberal fpirit or ftudious emulation; and I cannot defcribe, as I never knew, the difcipline of college. Some duties may poffibly have been imposed on the poor scholars, whofe ambition afpired to the peaceful honors of a fellow.hip (afcribi quietis ordinibus ---- Deorum); but

49

but no independent members were admitted below the rank of a gentleman commoner, and our velvet cap was the cap of liberty. A tradition prevailed that fome of our predeceffors had fpoken Latin declamations in the hall; but of this ancient cuftom no vestige remained: the obvious methods of public exercifes and examinations were totally unknown; and I have never heard that either the prefident or the fociety interfered in the private economy of the tutors and their pupils.

The filence of the Oxford profesfors, which deprives the youth of public inftruction, is imperfectly fupplied by the tutors, as they are ftyled, of the feveral colleges. Inftead of confining themfelves to a fingle fcience, which had fatisfied the ambition of Burman or Bernoully, they teach, or promife to teach, either hiftory or mathematics, or ancient literature, of moral philosophy; and as it is poffible that they may be defective in all, it is highly probable that of fome they will be ignorant. They are paid, indeed, by private contributions; but their appoint. ment depends on the head of the houfe : their diligence is voluntary, and will confequently be languid, while the pupils themfelves, or their parents, are not indulged in the liberty of choice or change. The first tutor into whole hands I was refigned appears to have been one of the best of the tribe : Dr. Waldgrave was a learned and pious man, of a mild difpofition, ftrict morals, and abstemious life, who feldom mingled in the politics or the jollity of the college. But his knowledge of the world was confined to the univerfity; his learning was of the laft, rather than

VOL. I.

E

50

of the prefent age; his temper was indolent; his faculties, which were not of the first rate, had been relaxed by the climate, and he was fatisfied, like his fellows, with the flight and fuperficial difcharge of an important truft. As foon as my tutor had founded the infufficiency of his disciple in school-learning, he proposed that we flould read every morning from ten to eleven the comedies of Terence. The fum of my improvement in the university of Oxford is confined to three or four Latin plays; and even the ftudy of an elegant claffic, which might have been illustrated by a comparison of ancient and modern theatres. was reduced to a dry and literal interpretation of the author's text. During the first weeks I constantly attended these lessons in my tutor's room; but as they appeared equally devoid of profit and pleafure. I was once tempted to try the experiment of a formal apology. The apology was accepted with a fmile. I repeated the offence with lefs ceremony; the excufe was admitted with the fame indulgence: the flightest motive of laziness or indisposition, the most trifling avocation at home or abroad, was allowed as a worthy impediment; nor did my tutor appear confcious of my absence or neglect. Had the hour of lecture been conftantly filled, a fingle hour was a fmall portion of my academic leifure. No plan of ftudy was recommended for my ule; no exercifes were prefcribed for his infpection ; and , at the most precious feafon of youth, whole days and weeks were fuffered to elapfe without labor or amufement. without advice or account. I fhould have liftened to the voice of reafon and of my tutor; his mild behaviour had gained my confidence. I preferred his fociety to that of the younger fludents; and in our evening walks to the top of Heddington-hill, we freely converfed on a variety of fubjects. Since the days of Pocock and Hyde, Oriental learning has always been the pride of Oxford, and I once expreffed an inclination to Rudy Arabic. His prudence discouraged this childish fancy; but he neglected the fair occasion of directing the ardor of a curious mind. During my absence in the Summer-vacation . Dr. Waldegrave accepted a college-living at Walhington in Suffex, and on my return I no longer found him at Oxford. From that time I have loft fight of my first tutor; but at the end of thirty years (1781) he was ftill alive; and the practice of exercife and temperance had entitled him to a healthy old age.

SI

The long recess between the Trinity and Michaelmas terms empties the colleges of Oxford, as well as the courts of Weftminster. I spent, at my father's house at Buriton in Hampshire, the two months of August and September. It is whimfical enough, that as foon as I left Magdalen College. my tafte for books began to revive ; but it was the fame blind and boyifh tafte for the purfuit of exotic hiftory. Unprovided with original learning, unformed in the habits of thinking, unfkilled in the arts of composition, I refolved-to write a book. The title of this first Effay, the Age of Sefostris, was perhaps fuggested by Voltaire's Age of Lewis XIV. which was new and popular; but my fole object was to inveftigate the probable date of the life and reign of the conqueror of Afia. I was then enamoured of Sir

E 2

52

John Marfham's Canon Chronicus; an elaborate work, of whole merits and defects I was not yet qualified to judge. According to his specious, though narrow plan, I fettled my hero about the time of Solomon, in the tenth century before the Chriftian zera. It was therefore incumbent on me, unlefs I would adopt Sir Ifaac Newton's fhorter chronology . to remove a formidable objection; and my folution, for a youth of fifteen, is not devoid of ingenuity. In his verfion of the Sacred Books, Manetho the high prieft has identified Sethofis, or Sefoftris, with the elder brother of Danaus, who landed in Greece, according to the Parian Marble, fifteen hundred and ten years before Chrift. But in my fuppolition the high prieft is guilty of a voluntary error; flattery is the prolific parent of falfhood. Manetho's Hiftory of Egypt is dedicated to Ptolemy Philadelphus, who derived a fabulous or illegitimate pedigree from the Macedonian kings of the race of Hercules. Danaus is the anceftor of Hercules; and after the failure of the elder branch, his descendants, the Ptolemies. are the fole reprefentatives of the royal family, and may claim by inheritance the kingdom which they hold by, conquest. Such were my juvenile difcoveries; at a riper age, I no longer presume to connect the Greek, the Jewifh, and the Egyptian antiquities, which are loft in a diftant cloud. Nor is this the only inftance, in which the belief and knowledge of the child are fuperfeded by the more rationnal ignorance of the man. During my ftay at Buriton, my infant-labor was diligently profecuted, without much interruption from company or country diverfions; and I already heard the mufic of public applaufe. The difcovery of my own weaknefs was the first fymptom of taste. On my return to Oxford, the Age of Sefostris was wifely relinquisted; but the imperfect semained twenty years at the bottom of a drawer, till, in a general clearance of papers, (November 1772,) they were committed to the flames.

53

After the departure of Dr. Waldgrave, I was transferred, with his other pupils, to his academical heir, whofe literary character did not command the respect of the college. Dr. * well remembered that he had a falary to receive, and only forgot that he had a duty to perform. Inftead of guiding the fludies, and watching over the behaviour of his disciple, I was never fummoned to attend even the ceremony of a lecture; and, excepting one voluntary vifit to his rooms, during the eight months of his titular office, the tutor and pupil lived in the fame college as ftrangers to each other. The want of experience, of advice, and of occupation, foon betrayed me into fome improprieties of conduct, illchofen company, late hours, and inconfiderate expense. My growing debts might be fecret; but my frequent absence was visible and scandalous: and a tour to Bath, a vifit into Buckinghamshire. and four excursions to London in the fame winter, were cofly and dangerous frolics. They were, indeed, without a meaning, as without an excuse. The irkfomenefs of a cloiftered life repeatedly tempted me to wander; but my chief pleafure was that of travelling; and I was too young and bathful to enjoy, like a Manly Oxonian in Town, the pleafures of London. In all thefe excursions I eloped from Oxford; I returned to college; in a few days I eloped again, as if I had been an independent firanger in a hired lodging, without once hearing the voice of admonition, without once feeling the hand of control. Yet my time was loft, my expenses were multiplied, my behaviour abroad was unknown; folly as well as vice fhould have awakened the attention of my superiors, and my tender years would have justified a more than ordinary degree of restraint and difcipline.

E 3

54

It might at leaft be expected, that an ecclefiaftical fchool fhould inculcate the orthodox principles of religion. But our venerable mother had contrived to unite the opposite extremes of bigotry and indifference : a heretic, or unbeliever, was a monster in her eyes; but fhe was always, or often, or fometimes, remifs in the fpiritual education of her own children. According to the flatutes of the univerfity, every fludent, before he is matriculated, must fubfcribe his affent to the thirty-nine articles of the church of England, which are figned by more than read, and read by more than believe them. My infufficient age excufed me, however, from the immediate performance of this legal ceremony; and the vice-chancellor directed me to return, as foon as I fhould have accomplifhed my fifteenth year; recommending me, in the mean while, to the inftruction of my college. My college forgot to inftruct : I forgot to return, and was myfelf forgotten by the first magistrate of the univerfity. Without a fingle lecture, either public or private, either christian or protestant, without any academical fubfcription, without any epifcopal confirmation, I was left by the dim light of my catechifm to grope my way to the chapel and communion-table, where I was admitted, without a queftion, how far, or by what means, I might be qualified to receive the facrament. Such almost incredible neglect was productive of the worft mifchiefs. From my childhood I had been fond of religious disputation : my poor aunt has been often puzzled by the mysteries which the strove to believe; nor had the elaftic fpring been totally broken by the weight of the atmosphere of Oxford. The blind activity of idlenefs urged me to advance without armor into the dangerous mazes of controverly; and at the age of fixteen, I bewildered myfelf in the errors of the church of Rome.

55

The progrefs of my conversion may tend to illuftrate, at leaft, the history of my own mind It was not long fince Dr. Middleton's free inquiry had founded an alarm in the theological world: much ink and much gall had been spilt in the defence of the primitive miracles; and the two dulleft of their champions were crowned with academic honors by the university of Oxford. The name of Middleton was unpepular; and his profeription very naturally led me to perufe his writings, and those of his antagonists. His bold criticism, which approaches the precipice of infidelity, produced on my mind a fingular effect; and had I perfevered in the communion of Rome, I should now apply to my own fortune the prediction of the Sybil,

E 4

56

Ouod minime reris, Graia, pandetur ab urbe.

The elegance of ftyle and freedom of argument were repelled by a fhield of prejudice. I ftill revered the character, or rather the names, of the faints and fathers whom Dr. Middleton exposes; nor could he deftroy my implicit belief. that the gift of miraculous powers was continued in the church, during the first four or five centuries of christianity. But I was unable to refift the weight of hiftorical evidence, that within the fame period moft of the leading doctrines of popery were already introduced in theory and practice: nor was my conclusion abfurd, that miracles are the teft of truth, and that the church must be orthodox and pure, which was fo often approved by the vifible interpolition of the Deity. The marvellous tales which are fo boldly attefted by the Bafils and Chryfoftoms, the Auftins and Jeroms, compelled me to embrace the fuperior merits of celibacy, the inftitution of the monaftic life, the ufe of the fign of the crofs, of holy oil, and even of images. the invocation of faints, the worfhip of relics, the rudiments of purgatory in prayers for the dead, and the tremendous mystery of the facrifice of the body. and blood of Chrift, which infenfibly fwelled into the prodigy of transubstantiation. In these dispositions, and already more than half a convert. I formed an unlucky intimacy with a young gentleman of our college, whole name I shall spare. With a character lefs refolute, Mr. * had imbibed the fame religious opinions; and fome Popifh books, I know not through what channel, were conveyed into his poffeffion. I read, I applauded, I believed : the English tranflations of two famous works of Boffuet Bifhop of Meaux, the Exposition of the Catholic Doctrine. and the Hiftory of the Protestant Variations, achieved my conversion, and I furely fell by a noble hand." I have fince examined the originals with a more difcerning eve, and shall not hefitate to pronounce. that Bolfuet is indeed a mafter of all the weapons of controverfy. In the Exposition, a specious apology, the orator allumes, with confummate art, the tone of candor and fimplicity; and the ten-horned monfter is transformed, at his magic touch, into the milk-white hind, who must be loved as foon as she is feen. In the Hiftory, a bold and well-aimed attack. he difplays, with a happy mixture of narrative and argument, the faults and follies, the changes and contradictions of our first reformers; whose variations (as he dexteroufly contends) are the mark of historical error, while the perpetual unity of the catholic church is the fign and teft of infallible truth. To my prefent feelings it feems incredible that I fhould ever believe that I believed in tranfubftantiation. But my conqueror opprefied me with the facramental words, " Hoc eft corpus meum, " and dashed against each other the figurative half - meanings of the protestant fects: every objection was refolved into omnipotence; and after repeating at St. Mary's the Athanafian creed, I humbly acquiefced in the mystery of the real prefence.

57

To take up half on truft, and half to try, Name it not faith, but bungling bigotry.

58

Both knave and fool, the merchant we may call. To pay great fums, and to compound the fmall, For who would break with Heaven, and would not break for all?

No fooner had I fettled my new religion than I refolved to profefs myfelf a catholic. Youth is fincere and impetuous; and a momentary glow of enthufiafm had raifed me above all temporal confiderations.⁷

By the keen protestants, who would gladly retaliate the example of perfecution, a clamor is raifed of the increase of popery : and they are always loud to declaim against the toleration of priests and jefuits, who pervert fo many of his majefty's fubjects from their religion and allegiance. On the prefent occafion, the fall of one or more of her fons directed this clamor against the university ; and it was confidently affirmed that popifh miffionaries were fuffered, under various difguifes, to introduce themfelves into the colleges of Oxford. But juffice obliges me to declare, that, as far as relates to myfelf, this affertion is falfe; and that I never converfed with a prieft, or even with a papift, till my refolution from books was abfolutely fixed. In my last excursion to London, I addreffed myfelf to Mr. Lewis, a Roman catholic bookfeller in Ruffel-street, Covent Garden, who recommended me to a prieft, of whole name and order I am at present ignorant. In our first interview he foon difcovered that perfuafion was needlefs. After founding the motives and merits of my conversion, he confented to admit me into the pale of the church ; and at his feet, on the eighth of June 1753, I folemnly, though privately, abjured the errors of herefy. The feduction of an English youth of family and fortune was an act of as much danger as glory; but he bravely overlooked the danger, of which I was not then fufficiently informed. "Where a perfon is reconciled " to the fee of Rome, or procures others to be re-" conciled, the offence (fays Blackstone) amounts " to high treafon." And if the humanity of the age would prevent the execution of this fanguinary ftatute, there were other laws of a lefs odious caft. which condemned the prieft to perpetual imprifonment, and transferred the profelyte's eftate to his nearest relation. An elaborate controversial epistle, approved by my director, and addreffed to my father, announced and juftified the ftep which I had taken. My father was neither a bigot nor a philosopher; but his affection deplored the lofs of an only fon; and his good fenfe was aftonished at my ftrange departure from the religion of my country. In the first fally of paffion he divulged a fecret which prudence might have fuppreffed, and the gates of Magdalen College were for ever flut against my return. Many years afterwards, when the name of Gibbon was become as notorious as that of Middleton, it was industriously whispered at Oxford, that the historian had formerly " turned papift:" my character flood exposed to the reproach of inconstancy; and this invidious topic would have been handled without mercy by my opponents, could they have feparated my caufe from that of the university. For my own part, I am proud of an honeft facrifice of intereft to confcience. I can never blufh, if my tender mind was entangled in the fophiftry that feduced the acute and manly underftandings of CHILLINGWORTH and BAYLE, who afterwards emerged from fuperfittion to fcepticifm.

59

60

While Charles the Firft governed England, and was himfelf governed by a catholic queen, it cannot be denied that the miffionaries of Rome labored with impunity and fuccefs in the court, the country, and even the univerfities. One of the fheep, —— Whom the grim wolf with privy paw Daily devours apace, and nothing faid, is Mr. William Chillingworth, Mafter of Arts, and Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford; who, at the ripe age of twenty-eight years, was perfuaded to elope from Oxford, to the English feminary at Douay in Flanders. Some difputes with Fifher, a fubtle jefuit, might first awaken him from the prejudices of education; but he yielded to his own victorious argument, " that there must be fomewhere an infal-" lible judge; and that the church of Rome is the " only christian fociety which either does or can " pretend to that character." After a fhort trial of a few months, Mr. Chilling worth was again tormented. by religious fcruples: he returned home, refumed his fludies, unravelled his miftakes, and delivered his mind from the yoke of authority and fuperstition, His new creed was built on the principle, that the Bible is our fole judge, and private reafon our fole interpreter : and he ably maintains this principle in the Religion of a Protestant, a book which, after ftartling the doctors of Oxford, is ftill efteemed the moft folid defence of the Reformation. The learning, the virtue, the recent merits of the author, entitled him to fair preferment: but the flave had now broken his fetters ; and the more he weighed, the lefs was he disposed to subscribe to the thirty-nine articles of the church of England. In a private letter he declares, with all the energy of language, that he could not fubfcribe to them without fubfcribing to his own damnation ; and that if ever he fhould depart from this immoveable refolution, he would allow his friends to think him a madman, or an atheift. As the letter is without a date, we cannot afcertain the number of weeks or months that elapfed between this paffionate abhorrence and the Salifbury Register. which is ftill extant. "Ego Gulielmus Chillingworth, " omnibus hifce articulis, & fingulis " in iifdem contentis volens, & ex animo fubscribo, " & confensum meum iisdem præbeo. 20 die Julii " 1638." But, alas! the chancellor and prebendary of Sarum foon deviated from his own fubscription : as he more deeply forutinized the article of the Trinity, neither fcripture nor the primitive fathers could long uphold his orthodox belief; and he could not but confess, " that the doctrine of Arius is either " a truth, or at least no damuable herefy." From this middle region of the air, the defcent of his reafon would naturally reft on the firmer ground of the Socinians: and if we may credit a doubtful ftory, and the popular opinion, his anxious inquiries at laft fubfided in philosophic indifference. So conspicuous, however, were the candor of his nature and the innocence of his heart, that this apparent levity did not affect the reputation of Chillingworth. His frequent changes proceeded from too nice an inquifition into truth. His doubts grew out of himfelf; he affifted them with all the ftrength of his reafon: he was then too hard for himfelf; but finding as little quiet and repofe in those victories, he quickly recovered, by a new appeal to his own judgment: fo that in all his fallies and retreats, he was in fact his own convert.

Sp

62

Bayle was the fon of a Calvinist minister in a remote province of France, at the foot of the Pyrenees. For the benefit of education, the protestants were tempted to rifk their children in the catholic univerfities; and in the twenty-fecond year of his age, young Bayle was feduced by the arts and arguments of the jesuits of Thoulouse. He remained about feventeen months (19th March 1669 - 19th August 1670) in their hands, a voluntary captive; and a letter to his parents, which the new convert compofed or fubscribed (15th April 1670), is darkly tinged with the fpirit of popery. But Nature had defigned him to think as he pleafed, and to fpeak as he thought: his piety was offended by the exceffive worfhip of creatures; and the ftudy of phyfics convinced him of the impoffibility of transubstantiation, which is abundantly refuted by the teftimony of our fenfes. His return to the communion of a falling fect was a bold and difinterefted ftep, that exposed him to the rigor of the laws; and a speedy flight to Geneva protected him from the refentment of his fpiritual tyrants, unconfcious as they were of the full value of the prize, which they had loft. Had Bayle adhered to the catholic church, had he embraced the ecclefiaftical profession, the genius and favor of fuch a profelyte might have afpired to wealth and honors in his native country : but the hypocrite would have found lefs happinefs in the comforts of a benefice, or the dignity of a mitre, than he enjoyed at Rotterdam in a private state of exile, indigence, and freedom. Without a country, or a patron, or a prejudice, he claimed the liberty and fubfifted by the labors of his pen: the inequality of his voluminous works is explained and excufed by his alternately writing for himfelf, for the bookfellers, and for posterity; and if a fevere critic would reduce him to a fingle folio, that relic, like the books of the Sybil. would become ftill more valuable. A calm and lofty fpectator of the religious tempeft, the philosopher of Rotterdam condemned with equal firmnels the perfecution of Lewis the Fourteenth, and the republican maxims of the Calvinifts; their vain prophecies, and the intolerant bigotry which fometimes vexed his folitary retreat. In reviewing the controverfies of the times, he turned against each other the arguments of the difputants; fucceffively wielding the arms of the catholics and protestants, he proves that neither the way of authority, nor the way of examination can afford the multitude any teft of religious truth; and dexteroufly concludes that cuftom and education must be the fole grounds of popular belief. The ancient paradox of Plutarch, that atheifm is lefs pernicious than fuperstition, acquires a tenfold vigor, when it is adorned with the colors of his wit, and pointed with the acuteness of his logic. His critical dictionary is a vaft repolitory of facts and opinions; and he balances the falfe religions in his fceptical fcales, till the oppofite quantities (if I may ufe the language of algebra) annihilate each other. The wonderful power which he fo boldly exercifed, of affembling doubts and objections, had tempted him jocofely to affume the title of the $vc\phi \epsilon \lambda \eta \gamma \epsilon_0 \epsilon \tau a Z \epsilon v c$, the cloud-compelling Jove; and in a converfation with the ingenious Abbé (afterwards Cardinal) de Polignac, he freely difclofed his univerfal Pyrrhonifm. "I am moft truly (faid Bayle) a " proteftant; for I proteft indifferently againft all " fyftems and all fects."

63

64

The academical refentment, which I may poffibly have provoked, will prudently fpare this plain narrative of my ftudies, or rather of my idlenefs; and of the unfortunate event which fhortened the term of my refidence at Oxford. But it may be fuggested, that my father was unlucky in the choice of a fociety, and the chance of a tutor. It will perhaps be afferted, that in the lapfe of forty years many improvements have taken place in the college and in the univerfity. I am not unwilling to believe, that fome tutors might have been found more active than Dr. Waldgrave, and lefs contemptible than Dr. *. About the fame time, and in the fame walk, a Bentham was still treading in the footfteps of a Burton, whole maxims he had adopted, and whofe life he had published. The biographer indeed preferred the fchool-logic to the new philosophy, Burgurfdicius to Locke; and the hero appears, in his own writings, a ftiff and conceited pedant. Yet even these men, according to urn:nbn:de:qbv:3:1-700122-p0084-8

to the measure of their capacity, might be diligent and uleful; and it is recorded of Burton, that he taught his pupils what he knew; fome Latin, fome Greek, fome ethics and metaphyfics; referring them to proper mafters for the languages and fciences of which he was ignorant. At a more recent period, many fludents have been attracted by the merit and reputation of Sir William Scott, then a tutor in Univerfity College, and now confpicuous in the profession of the civil law : my perfonal acquaintance with that gentleman has infpired me with a just efteem for his abilities and knowledge ; and I am affured that his lectures on hiftory would compose, were they given to the public, a most valuable treatife. Under the aufpices of the prefent Archbishop of York, Dr. Markham, himfelf an eminent scholar, a more regular discipline has been introduced, as I am told, at Chrift Church "; a courfe of claffical and philosophical ftudies is propoled, and even purfued, in that numerous feminary: learning has been made a duty, a pleafure, and even a fashion; and feveral young gentlemen do honor to the college in which they have been educated. According to the will, of the donor, the profit of the fecond part of Lord Clarendon's Hiftory has been applied to the eftablishment of a riding - fchool, that the polite exercifes might be taught, I know not with what fuccefs, in the university. The Vinerian professorship is of far more ferious importance; the laws of his country are the first fcience of an Englishman of rank and fortune, who is called to be a magistrate, and may VOL. I.

hope to be a legiflator. This judicious inflitution was coldly entertained by the graver doctors, who complained (I have heard the complaint) that it would take the young people from their books: but Mr. Viner's benefaction is not unprofitable, fince it has at least produced the excellent commentaries of Sir William Blackstone.

After carrying me to Putney, to the houfe of his friend Mr. Mallet', by whole philosophy I was rather fcandalized than reclaimed, it was neceffary for my father to form a new plan of education. and to devife fome method which, if poffible, might effect the cure of my fpiritual malady. After much debate it was determined, from the advice and perfonal experience of Mr. Eliot (now Lord Eliot) to fix me, during fome years, at Laufanne in Switzerland. Mr. Frey, a Swifs gentleman of Bafil, undertook the conduct of the journey : we left London the 19th of June, croffed the fea from Dover to Calais, travelled post through feveral provinces of France, by the direct road of St. Quentin, Rheims, Langres, and Belancon, and arrived the 30th of June at Laufanne, where I was immediately fettled under the roof and tuition of Mr. Pavilliard, a Calvinist minister.

The first marks of my father's difpleafore rather aftonished than afflicted me: when he threatened to banish, and difown, and difinherit a rebellious fon, I cherished a fecret hope that he would not be able or willing to effect his menaces; and the pride of confcience encouraged me to fustain the honorable and important part which I was now acting. My fpirits were raifed and kept alive by the rapid motion of my journey, the new and various fcenes of the Continent, and the civility of Mr. Frey, a man of fenfe, who was not ignorant of books or the world. But after he had refigned me into Pavilliard's hands, and I was fixed in my new habitation. I had leifure to contemplate the ftrange and melancholy prospect before me. My first complaint arole from my ignorance of the language. In my childhood I had once ftudied the French grammar, and I could imperfectly underftand the easy profe of a familiar fubject. But when 1 was thus fuddenly caft on a foreign land, I found myfelf deprived of the ufe of fpeech and of hearing; and, during fome weeks, incapable not only of enjoying the pleafures of conversation, but even of afking or anfwering a queftion in the common intercourfe of life. To a home-bred Englishman every object, every cultom was offenfive; but the native of any country might have been difgufted with the general afpect of his lodging and entertainment. I had now exchanged my elegant apartment in Magdalen College, for a narrow, gloomy fireet, the most unfrequented of an unhandfome town, for an old inconvenient house, and for a fmall chamber ill contrived and ill-furnished, which, on the approach of Winter, inftead of a compan. ionable fire, must be warmed by the dull invisible heat of a flove. From a man I was again degraded to the dependance of a school - boy. Mr. Pavilliard managed my expenses, which had been reduced to a diminutive state : I received a fmall F 2 monthly allowance for my pocket-money; and helplefs and awkward as I have ever been. I no longer enjoyed the indifpenfable comfort of a fervant. My condition feemed as deftitute of hope, as it was devoid of pleafure : I was feparated for an indefinite, which appeared an infinite term, from my native country; and I had loft all connexion with my catholic friends. I have fince reflected with furprife, that as the Romifh clergy of every part of Europe maintain a clofe correspondence with each other, they never attempted, by letters or melfages, to refcue me from the hands of the heretics, or at leaft to confirm my zeal and conftancy in the profession of the faith. Such was my first introduction to Laufanne; a place where I fpent nearly five years with pleafure and profit. which I afterwards revisited without compulsion. and which I have finally felected as the most grateful retreat for the decline of my life.

67

68

But it is the peculiar felicity of youth that the moft unpleafing objects and events feldom make a deep or lafting impreffion; it forgets the paft, enjoys the prefent, and anticipates the future. At the flexible age of fixteen I foon learned to endure, and gradually to adopt, the new forms of arbitrary manners: the real hardfhips of my fituation were alienated by time. Had I been fent abroad in a more fplendid ftyle, fuch as the fortune and bounty of my father might have fupplied, I might have returned home with the fame ftock of language and fcience, which our countrymen' ufually import from the Continent. An exile and a prifoner as I was, their example betrayed me into fome irregularities of wine, of play, and of idle excursions : but I foon felt the impoffibility of affociating with them on equal terms; and after the departure of my first acquaintance, I held a cold and civil correspondence with their fucceffors. This feclusion from English fociety was attended with the most folid benefits. In the Pays de Vaud, the French language is ufed with lefs imperfection than in moft of the diftant provinces of France : in Pavilliard's family, neceffity compelled me to liften and to speak; and if I was at first difficartened by the apparent flownefs, in a few months I was aftonifhed by the rapidity of my progrefs. My pronunciation was formed by the constant repetition of the fame founds; the variety of words and idioms, the rules of grammar, and diffinctions of genders, were impressed in my memory: eafe and freedom were obtained by practice; correctnefs and elegance by labor; and before I was recalled home, French, in which I fpontaneoufly thought, was more familiar than English to my ear, my tongue, and my pen. The first effect of this opening knowledge was the revival of my love of reading, which had been chilled at Oxford ; and I foon turned over, without much choice, almost all the French books in my tutor's library. Even thefe amufements were productive of real advantage: my tafte and judgment were now fomewhat riper. I was introduced to a new mode of style and literature : by the comparison of manners and opinions, my views were enlarged my prejudices were corrected, and a copious voluntary abstract of the Histoire de l'Eglise & de l'Empire, by le Sueur, may be placed in a middle line between my childiff and my manly fludies. As foon as I was able to converse with the natives, I began to feel fome fatisfaction in their company: my awkward timidity was polified and emboldened; and I frequented, for the first time, affemblies of men and women. The acquaintance of the Pavilliards prepared me by degrees for more elegant fociety. I was received with kindnels and indulgence in the belt families of Laufanne; and it was in one of these that I formed an intimate and lafting connexion with Mr. Deyverdun, a young man of an amiable temper and excellent understanding. In the arts of fencing and dancing fmall indeed was my proficiency ; and fome months were idly wafted in the riding - fchool. My unfitnefs to bodily exercife reconciled me to a fedentary life, and the horfe, the favorite of my countrymen, never contributed to the pleafures of my youth.

69

F_3

70

My obligations to the leffons of Mr. Pavilliard, gratitude will not fuffer me to forget: he was endowed with a clear head and a warm heart; his innate benevolence had affuaged the fpirit of the church; he was rational, becaufe he was moderate: in the courfe of his fludies he had acquired a juft though fuperficial knowledge of moft branches of literature; by long practice, he was fkilled in the arts of teaching; and he labored with affiduous patience to know the character, gain the affection, and open the mind of his Englifh pupil¹⁸. As foon as we began to underfland each other, he gently led me, from a blind and undifunguifning love of reading, into the path of infruction. I confented with pleafure that a portion of the morning - hours fhould be confectated to a plan of modern hiftory and geography, and to the critical perufal of the French and Latin claffics; and at each ftep I felt myfelf invigorated by the habits of application and method. His prudence represed and dif. fembled fome youthful fallies; and as foon as I was confirmed in the habits of industry and temperance. he gave the reins into my own hands. His favorable report of my behaviour and progrefs gradually obtained fome latitude of action and expense; and he wifhed to alleviate the hardfhips of my lodging and entertainment. The principles of philosophy were affociated with the examples of tafte; and by a fingular chance, the book, as well as the man, which contributed the most effectually to my education. has a ftronger claim on my gratitude than on my admi. ration. Mr. De Croufaz, the adverfary of Bayle and Pope, is not diffinguished by lively fancy or profound reflection; and even in his own country, at the end of a few years, his name and writings are almost obliterated. But his philosophy had been formed in the school of Locke, his divinity in that of Limborch and Le Clerc; in a long and laborious life, feveral generations of pupils were taught to think, and even to write; his leffons refcued the academy of Laufanne from Calviniftic prejudice; and he had the rare merit of diffuting a more liberal fpirit among the clergy and people of the Pays de Vaud. His fystem of logic which in the laft editions has fwelled to fix tedious and prolix volumes, may be praifed as a clear and methodical abridgment of the art of reafoning, from our fimple ideas to the most complex operations of the human understanding. This fystem I studied, and meditated, and abstracted, till I have obtained the free command of an universal instrument, which I foon prefumed to exercife on my catholic opinions. Pavilliard was not undmindful that his first task, his most important duty, was to reclaim me from the errors of popery. The intermixture of fects has rendered the Swifs clergy acute and learned on the topics of controverly; and I have fome of his letters in which he celebrates the dexterity of his attack, and my gradual conceffions, after a firm and well managed defence ". I was willing, and I am now willing, to allow him a handfome fhare of the honor of my conversion: yet I must observe, that it was principally effected by my private reflections; and I ftill remember my folitary transport at the difcovery of a philosophical argument against the doctrine of tranfubstantiation : that the text of scripture, which feems to inculcate the real prefence, is attefted only by a fingle fenfe - our fight; while the real prefence itfelf is difproved by three of our fenfes - the fight, the touch, and the tafte. The various articles of the Romif creed difappeared like a dream ; and after a full conviction, on Chriftmas-day 1754, I received the facrament in the church of Laufanne. It was here that I fuspended my religious inquiries, acquiescing with implicit belief in the tenets and mysteries, which are adopted by the general confent of catholics and protestants 12.

71

F4

72

Such, from my arrival at Laufanne, during the first eighteen or twenty months (July 1753-March 1755), were my uleful studies, the foundation of all my future improvements. But every man who

73

rifes above the common level has received two educations : the first from his teachers ; the fecond, more perfonal and important, from himfelf. He will not, like the fanatics of the last age, define the moment of grace; but he cannot forget the era of his life, in which his mind has expanded to its proper form and dimensions. My worthy tutor had the good fense and modefly to difcern how far he could be useful : as foon as he felt that I advanced beyond his fpeed and measure, he wifely left me to my genius; and the hours of leffon were foon loft in the voluntary labor of the whole morning, and fometimes of the whole day. The defire of prolonging my time, gradually confirmed the falutary habit of early rifing; to which I have always adhered, with fome regard to feafons and fituations: but it is happy for my eyes and my health, that my temperate ardor has never been feduced to trefpafs on the hours of the night. During the last three years of my refidence at Laufanne, I may affume the merit of ferious and folid application; but I am tempted to diffinguish the last eight months of the year 1755, as the period of the most extraordinary diligence and rapid progrefs". In my French and Latin tranflations I adopted an excellent method, which, from my own fuccefs, I would recommend to the imitation of fludents. I chofe fome claffic writer, fuch as Cicero and Vertot. the most approved for purity and elegance of style. I translated, for instance, an epistle of Cicero into French; and after throwing it afide, till the words and phrafes were obliterated from my memory, I retranslated my French into fuch Latin as I could find ; and then compared each fentence of my imperfect version, with the ease, the grace, the propriety of the Roman orator. A fimilar experiment was made on feveral pages of the Revolutions of Vertot; I turned them into Latin, returned them after a fufficient interval into my own French, and again fcrutinized the refemblance or diffimilitude of the copy and the original. By degrees I was lefs afhamed, by degrees I was more fatisfied with myfelf; and I perfevered in the practice of these double translations, which filled feveral books, till I had acquired the knowledge of both idioms, and the command at leaft of a correct ftyle. This ufeful exercise of writing was accompanied and fucceeded by the more pleafing occupation of reading the best authors. The perufal of the Roman claffics was at once my exercife and reward. Dr. Middleton's Hiftory, which I then appreciated above its true value, naturally directed me to the writings of Cicero. The most perfect editions, that of Olivet which may adorn the shelves of the rich, that of Ernefti, which fhould lie on the table of the learned, were not in my power. For the familiar epiftles I used the text and English commentary of Bifhop Rofs: but my general edition was that of Verburgius, published at Amsterdam in two large volumes in folio, with an indifferent choice of various notes. I read, with application and pleafure, all the epifiles, all the orations, and the most important treatifes of rhetoric and philofophy; and as I read, I applauded the observation of Quintilian, that every fludent may judge of his own proficiency, by the fatisfaction which he receives from the Roman orator. I tafted the beauties of language. I breathed the fpirit of freedom, and I imbibed from his precepts and examples the public and private fenfe of a man. Cicero in Latin, and Xenophon in Greek. 'are indeed the two ancients whom I would first propofe to a liberal fcholar; not only for the merit of their ftyle and fentiments, but for the admirable leffons, which may be applied almost to every fituation of public and private life. Cicero's Epiftles may in particular afford the models of every form of correspondence, from the careless effusions of tendernefs and friendfhip, to the well-guarded declaration of difcreet and dignified refentment. After finishing this great author, a library of eloquence and reafon, I formed a more extensive plan of review. ing the Latin claffics ", under the four divisions of, 1. hiftorians, 2. poets, 3. orators, and 4. philofophers, in a chronological feries, from the days of Plautus and Salluft, to the decline of the language and empire of Rome : and this plan, in the laft twenty-feven months of my refidence at Laufanne (January 1756 - April 1758), I nearly accomplished. Nor was this review, however rapid, either hafty or superficial. I indulged myself in a second and even a third perufal of Terence, Virgil, Horace, Tacitus, &c. and fludied to imbibe the fenfe and spirit most congenial to my own. I never fuffered a difficult or corrupt paffage to escape, till I had viewed it in every light of which it was fusceptible : though often difappointed, I always confulted the most learned or ingenious commentators, Torrentius and Dacier on Horace, Catrou and Servins on Virgil,

iversitäts- und Landesbibliothek Sachsen-Anh urn:nhn:de:gbv:3:1-700122-n0093-3

74

75

76

Lipfius on Tacitus, Meziriac on Ovid, &c.; and in the ardor of my inquiries, I embraced a large circle of hiltorical and critical erudition. My abftracts of each book were made in the French language: my obfervations often branched into particular effays; and I can ftill read, without contempt, a differtation of eight folio pages on eight lines (287 – 294) of the fourth Georgic of Virgil. Mr. Deyverdun, my friend, whofe name will be frequently repeated, had joined with equal zeal, though not with equal perfeverance, in the fame undertaking. To him every thought, every composition, was inftantly communicated; with him I enjoyed the benefits of a free conversation on the topics of our common ftudies.

Bu it is fearcely poffible for a mind endowed with any active curiofity to be long converfant with the Latin claffics, without afpiring to know the Greek originals, whom they celebrate as their mafters, and of whom they fo warmly recommend the fludy and imitation, —— Vos exemplaria Græca Nocturnâ versate manu, versate diurnâ.

It was now that I regretted the early years which had been wafted in ficknefs or idlenefs, or mere idle reading; that I condemned the perverfe method of our fchoolmafters, who, by first teaching the mother-language, might defcend with fo much ease and perfpicuity to the origin and etymology of a derivative idiom. In the nineteenth year of my age I determined to supply this defect; and the leffons of Pavilliard again contributed to fmooth the entrance of the way, the Greek alphabet, the grammar, and the pronunciation according to the French accent. At my earnest requeft we prefumed to open the Iliad ; and I had the pleafure of beholding, though darkly and through a glafs, the true image of Homer, whom I had long fince admired in an English drefs. After my tutor had left me to myfelf, I worked my way through about half the Iliad, and afterwards interpreted alone a large portion of Xenophon and Herodotus. But my ardor, deftitute of aid and emulation, was gradually cooled, and, from the barren talk of fearching words in a lexicon, I withdrew to the free and familiar conversation of Virgil and Tacitus. Yet in my refidence at Laufanne I had laid a folid foundation, which enabled me, in a more propitious feafon, to profecute the fludy of Grecian literature.

77

From a blind idea of the ufefulnefs of fuch abftract fcience, my father had been defirous, and even preffing, that I fhould devote fome time to the mathematics ¹⁵; nor could I refufe to comply with fo reafonable a wifh. During two winters I attended the private lectures of Monfieur de Traytorrens, who explained the elements of algebra and geometry, as far as the conic fections of the Marquis de l'Hôpital, and appeared fatisfied with my diligence and improvement ¹⁶. But as my childifh propenfity for numbers and calculations was totally extinct, I was content to receive the paffive imprefion of my Profeffor's lectures, without any active exercife of my own powers. As foon as I underftood the principles, I relinquifhed for ever the pursuit of the mathematics: nor can I las ment that I defifted, before my mind was hardened by the habit of rigid demonstration, fo destructive of the finer feelings of moral evidence, which muft, however, determine the actions and opinions of our lives. I liftened with more pleafure to the propofal of fludying the law of nature and nations. which was taught in the academy of Laufanne by Mr Vicat, a professor of fome learning and reputation. But, inftead of attending his public or private courfe, 1 preferred in my clofet the leffons of his mafters, and my own reason. Without being difgusted by Grotius or Puffendorf, I ftudied in their writings the duties of a man, the rights of a citizen, the theory of justice (it is, alas! a theory) and the laws of peace and war, which have had fome influence on the practice of moderne Europe. My fatigues were alleviated by the good fenfe of their commentator Barbeyrac. Locke's Treatife of Government inftructed me in the knowledge of Whig principles, which are rather founded in reason than experience; but my delight was in the frequent perufal of Montesquien, whose energy of ftyle, and boldnefs of hypothefis, were powerful to awaken and ftimulate the genius of the age. The logic of De Croufaz had prepared me to engage with his mafter Locke, and his antagonift Bayle; of whom the former may be uled as a bridle, and the latter applied as a fpur, to the curiofity of a young philosopher. According to the nature of their refpective works, the fchools of argument and objection, I carefully went through the Effay on Human Understanding, and occasionally confulted the most interesting articles of the Philosophic Dictionary. In the infancy of my reafon I turned over, as an idle amusement, the most ferious and important treatife: in its maturity. the most trifling performance could exercise my tafte or judgment : and more than once I have been led by a novel into a deep and inftructive train of thinking. But I cannot forbear to mention three particular books, fince they may have remotely contributed to form the hiftorian of the Roman empire. 1. From the Provincial Letters of Pafcal, which almost every year I have perufed with new pleafure, I learned to manage the weapon of grave and temperate irony, even on fubjects of ecclefiaftical folemnity. 2. The Life of Julian, by the Abbé de la Bleterie, first introduced me to the man and the times; and I fhould be glad to recover my first effay on the truth of the miracle which ftopped the rebuilding of the Temple of Jerufalem. 3. In Giannone's Civil Hiftory of Naples, I observed with a critical eye the progress and abuse of facerdotal power, and the revolutions of Italy in the darker ages. This various reading which I now conducted with difcretion, was digested, according to the precept and model of Mr. Locke, into a large common-place book; a practice, however, which I do not ftrenuoufly recommend. The action of the pen will doubtlefs imprint an idea on the mind as well as on the paper : but I much queftion whether the benefits of this laborious method are adequate to the wafte of time; and I must agree with Dr. Johnfon, (Idler, No. 74) " that what is twice read, is commonly better remem-" bered, than what is transcribed."

78

79

80

During two years, if I forget fome boyifh excurfions of a day or a week, I was fixed at Laufanne; but at the end of the third fummer, my father confented that I fhould make the tour of Switzerland with Pavilliard : and our fort abfence of one month (September 21ft - October 20th, 1755) was a reward and relaxation of my affiduous ftudies ". The fashion of climbing the mountains and reviewing the Glaciers, had not yet been introduced by foreign travellers, who feek the fublime beauties of nature. But the political face of the country is not lefs diversified by the forms and fpirit of fo many various republics, from the jealous government of the few to the licentious freedom of the many. I contemplated with pleafure the new prospects of men and manners; though my conversation with the natives would have been more free and inftructive, had I poffeffed the German, as well as the French language. We paffed through most of the principal towns of Switzerland; Neufchâtel, Bienne, Soleure, Arau, Baden, Zurich, Bafil, and Bern. In every place we vifited the churches, arfenals, libraries, and all the most eminent perfons; and after my return, I digefted my notes in fourteen or fifteen sheets of a French journal. which I difpatched to my father, as a proof that my time and his money had not been mif. fpent. Had I found this journal among his papers, I might be tempted to felect fome paffages; but I will not transcribe transcribe the printed accounts, and it may be fufficient to notice a remarkable fpot, which left a deep and lafting impreffion on my memory. From Zurich we proceeded to the Benedictine Abbey of Einfidlen, more commonly ftyled Our Lady of the Hermits. I was aftonifhed by the profufe oftentation of riches in the pooreft corner of Europe; amidft a favage fcene of woods and mountains, a palace appears to have been crected by magic; and it was erected by the potent magic of religion. A crowd of palmers and votaries was proftrate before the altar. The title and worthip of the Mother of God provoked my indignation; and the lively naked image of fuperflition fuggested to me, as in the fame place it had done to Zuinglius, the most preffing argument for the reformation of the church. About two years after this tour, I paffed at Geneva a ufeful and agreeable month; but this excursion, and some short visits in the Pays de Vaud, did not materially interrupt my fludious and fedentary life at Laufanne.

My thirft of improvement, and the languid flate of fcience at Laufanne, foon prompted me to folicit a literary correspondence with feveral men of learning, whom I had not an opportunity of perfonally confulting. 1. In the perufal of Livy, (xxx. 44.) I had been ftopped by a fentence in a fpeech of Hannibal, which cannot be reconciled by any torture with his character or argument. The commentators diffemble, or confefs their perplexity. It occurred to me, that the change of a fingle letter, by fubfituting olio inftead of odio, might Vol. I. G reftore a clear and confistent sense; but I wished to weigh my emendation in fcales lefs partial than my own. I addreffed myfelf to Mr. Crevier ", the fucceffor of Rollin, and a profeffor in the univerfity of Paris, who had published a large and valuable edition of Livy. His anfwer was fpeedy and polite; he praifed my ingenuity, and adopted my conjecture. 2. I maintained a Latin correspondence, at first anonymous, and afterwards in my own name, with Professor Breitinger 19 of Zurich, the learned editor of a Septuagint Bible. In our frequent letters we difcuffed many queftions of antiquity, many paffages of the Latin claffics. I proposed my interpretations and amendments. His cenfures, for he did not spare my boldness of conjecture, were fharp and ftrong; and I was encouraged by the confcioufnefs of my ftrength, when I could ftand in free debate against a critic of fuch eminence and 3. I corresponded on fimilar topics crudition. with the celebrated Professor Matthew Geiner 20, of the univerfity of Gottingen; and he accepted, as courteoully as the two former, the invitation of an unknown youth. But his abilities might poffibly be decayed; his elaborate letters were feeble and prolix: and when I afked his proper direction, the vain old man covered half a fheet of paper with the foolifh enumeration of his titles and offices. 4. Thefe Profeffors of Paris, Zurich, and Gottingen, were ftrangers, whom I prefumed to addrefs on the credit of their name; but Mr. Allamand 21, Minister at Bex, was my perfonal friend, with whom I maintained a more free and interefting correspondence. He was a mafter of language, of fcience, and, above all, of dispute ; and his acute and flexible logic could fupport, with equal addrefs, and perhaps with equal indifference, the adverse fides of every poffible queftion. His fpirit was active, but his pen had been indolent. Mr. Allamand had expofed himfelf to much fcandal and reproach, by an anonymous letter (1745) to the Protestants of France: in which he labors to perfuade them that public worthip is the exclusive right and duty of the flate. and that their numerous affemblies of diffenters and rebels were not authorized by the law or the gofpel. His ftyle is animated, his arguments specious: and if the papift may feem to lurk under the malk of a protestant, the philosopher is concealed under the difguife of a papift. After fome trials in France and Hollaud, which were defeated by his fortune or his character, a genius that might have enlightened or deluded the world, was buried in a country living, unknown to fame, and difcontented with mankind. EA facrificulus in pago, & ruflicos decipit. As often as private or ecclefiaftical bufinefs called him to Laufanne, I enjoyed the pleafure and benefit of his conversation, and we were mutually flattered by our attention to each other. Our correspondence, in his absence; chiefly turned on Locke's metaphyfics, which he attacked, and I defended; the origin of ideas, the principles of evid. ence, and the doctrine of liberty;

8r.

82

83

And found no end, in wandering mazes loft.

mentil to stolenge this sweet there. G 2 all some

By fencing with fo fkilful a mafter, I acquired fome dexterity in the ufe of my philofophic weapons; but I was ftill the flave of education and prejudice. He had fome meafures to keep; and I much fufpect that he never flowed me the true colors of his fecret fcepticifm.

Before I was recalled from Switzerland, I had the fatisfaction of feeing the most extraordinary man of the age; a poet, a hiftorian, a philosopher, who has filled thirty quartos, of profe and verfe. with his various productions, often excellent, and always entertaining. Need I add the name of Voltaire? After forfeiting, by his own milconduct, the friendship of the first of kings, he retired, at the age of fixty, with a plentiful fortune, to a free and beautiful country, and refided two winters (1757 and 1758) in the town or neighbourhood of Laufanne. My defire of beholding Voltaire, whom I then rated above his real magnitude, was eafily gratified. He received me with civility as an English youth; but I cannot boaft of any peculiar notice or diffinction. Virgilium vidi tantum.

The ode which he composed on his first arrival on the banks of the Leman Lake, O Maifon d'Ariftoppe! O Jardin d'Epicure, &c. had been imparted as a fecret to the gentleman by whom I was introduced. He allowed me to read it twice; I knew it by heart; and as my diferetion was not equal to my memory, the author was foon difpleased by the circulation of a copy. In writing this trivial anecdote, I wished to observe whether my memory was impaired, and I have the comfort of finding that every line of the poem is ftill engraved in frefh and indelible characters. The higheft gratification which I derived from Voltaire's refidence at Laufanne, was the uncommon circumstance of hearing a great poet declaim his own productions on the ftage. He had formed a company of gentlemen and ladies, fome of whom were not destitute of talents. A decent theatre was framed at Monrepos, a country - house at the end of a suburb ; dreffes and scenes were provided at the expense of the actors; and the author directed the rehearfals with the zeal and attention of paternal love. In two fucceffive winters his tragedies of Zayre, Alzire, Zulime, and his fentimental comedy of the Enfant Prodigue, were played at the theatre of Monrepos. Voltaire reprefented the characters best adapted to his years, Lufignan, Alvarez, Benaffar, Euphemon. His declamation was fashioned to the pomp and cadence of the old ftage; and he expressed the enthusiasm of poetry, rather than the feelings of nature. My ardor, which foon became confpicuous, feldom failed of procuring me a ticket. The babits of pleafure fortified my tafte for the French theatre, and that tafte has perhaps abated my idolatry for the gigantic genius of Shakfpeare, which is inculcated from our infancy as the first duty of an Englishman. The wit and philosophy of Voltaire, his table and theatre, refined, in a vilible degree, the manners of Laufanne; and, however addicted to fludy, I enjoyed my fhare of the amufements of fociety. After the reprefentation of Monrepos I fometimes fupped with the actors. I was now familiar in fome, and acquainted in many houfes; and my evenings were generally devoted to cards and conversation, either in private parties or numerous affemblies.

85

G 3

26

I hefitate, from the apprehension of ridicule. when I approach the delicate fubject of my early love. By this word I do not mean the polite attention, the gallantry, without hope or defign, which has originated in the fpirit of chivalry, and is interwoven with the texture of French manners. I understand by this passion the union of defire, friendfhip, and tendernefs, which is inflamed by a fingle female, which prefers her to the reft of her fex. and which feeks her poffeffion as the fupreme or the fole happiness of our being. I need not blush at recollecting the object of my choice; and though my love was difappointed of fuccefs, I am rather proud that I was once capable of feeling fuch a pure and exalted fentiment. The perfonal attractions of Mademoifelle Sufan Curchod were embellished by the virtues and talents of the mind. Her fortune was humble, but her family was respectable. Her mother, a native of France, had preferred her religion to her country. The profession of her father did not extinguish the moderation and philosophy of his temper, and he lived content with a fmall falary and laborious duty, in the obfcure lot of minister of Craffy, in the mountains that feparate the Pays de Vaud from the county of Burgundy 22. In the folitude of a fequestered village he bestowed a liberal, and even learned, education on his only daughter. She furpaffed his hopes by her proficiency in the fciences and languages; and in her fhort vifits to fome relations at Laufanne, the wit, the beauty, and erudition of Mademoifelle Curchod were the theme of univerfal applaufe. The report of fuch a prodigy awakened my curiofity; I faw and loved. I found her learned without pedantry. lively in conversation, pure in fentiment, and elegant in manners; and the first fudden emotion was fortified by the habits and knowledge of a more familiar acquaintance. She permitted me to make her two or three vifits at her father's houfe. I paffed fome happy days there, in the mountains of Burgundy, and her parents honorably encouraged the connexion. In a calm retirement the gay vanity of youth no longer fluttered in her bofom ; fhe liftened to the voice of truth and paffion, and I might prefume to hope that I had made fome impreffion on a virtuous heart. At Craffy and Laufanne I indulged my dream of felicity : but on my return to England, I foon difcovered that my father would not hear of this ftrange alliance, and that without his confent I was myfelf deftitute and helplefs. After a painful ftruggle I yielded to my fate: I fighed as a lover, I obeyed as a fon²³; my wound was infenfibly healed by time, abfence, and the habits of a new life. My cure was accelerated by a faithful report of the tranquillity and cheerfulnefs of the lady herfelf, and my love fubfided in friendfhip and efteem. The minister of Craffy foon afterwards died; his flipend died with him : his daughter retired to Geneva, where by teaching young ladies, fhe earned a hard fubfiftence for herfelf and her mother; but in her lowest distress she maintained a fpotlefs reputation, and a dignified behaviour. A rich banker of Paris, a citizen of Geneva, had the good fortune and good fenfe to difcover and poffefs this ineftimable treafure; and in the capital of tafte and luxury fhe refifted the temptations of wealth, as fhe had fuftained the hardfhips of indigence. The genius of her hufband has exalted him to the moft confpicuous flation in Europe. In every change of profperity and difgrace he has reclined on the bofom of a faithful friend; and Mademoifelle Curchod is now the wife of M. Necker, the minifter, and perhaps the legiflator, of the French monarchy.

87

G4

Whatfoever have been the fruits of my education, they must be afcribed to the fortunate baniflument which placed me at Laufanne. I have fometimes applied to my own fate the verses of Pindar, which remind an Olympic champion that his victory was the confequence of his exile; and that at home, like a domestic fowl, his days might have rolled away inactive or inglorious.

Ατοι και τεά κεν,
 Ένδομάχας άτ' αλέλιως,
 Συγγόνω πας έσίια
 Ακλεής τιμά κατεΦυλλοςόμσε ποδών*
 Εί μι σίνσες άνιμάνειρα
 Κυσσίας άμερσε πάτρας ²⁴. Olum

Olymp. xii.

If my childifh revolt against the religion of my country had not stripped me in time of my academic gown, the five important years, fo liberally improved in the studies and conversation of Laufanne, would have been steeped in port and prejudice among the monks of Oxford. Had the fatigue of idlenefs compelled me to read, the path of learning would not have been enlightened by a ray of philosophic freedom. 1 fould have grown to manhood ignorant of the life and language of Europe, and my knowledge of the world would have been confined to an English cloifter. But my religious error fixed me at Laufanne, in a state of banishment and difgrace. The rigid course of difcipline and abstinence, to which I was condemned, invigorated the conftitution of my mind and body; poverty and pride eftranged me from my countrymen. One mifchief, however, and in their eyes a ferious and irreparable mischief, was derived from the fuccefs of my Swifs education : I had ceafed to be an Englishman. At the flexible period of youth, from the age of fixteen to twenty one, my opinions, habits, and fentiments were cast in a foreign mould; the faint and diftant remembrance of England was almost obliterated; my native language was grown lefs familiar; and I fhould have cheerfully accepted the offer of a moderate independence on the terms of perpetual exile. By the good fenfe and temper of Pavilliard my yoke was infenfibly lightened: he left me mafter of my time and actions; but he could neither change my fituation, nor increase my allowance, and with the progress of my years and reason I impatiently fighed for the moment of my deliverance. At length, in the Spring of the year one thousand feven hundred and fifty - eight, my father fignified his permiffion and his pleafure that I fhould immediately return home. We were then in the midft of a war : the

89

urn:nbn:de:gbv:3:1-700122-p0109-1

90

refentment of the French at our taking their flips without a declaration, had rendered that polite nation fomewhat peevifh and difficult. They denied as paffage to English travellers, and the road through Germany was circuitous, toilfome, and perhaps in the neighbourhood of the armies. ex. pofed to fome danger. In this perplexity, two Swifs officers of my acquaintance in the Dutch fervice, who were returning to their garrifons, offered to conduct me through France as one of their companions ; nor did we fufficiently reflect that my borrowed name and regimentals might have been confidered, in cafe of a difcovery, in a very ferious light. I took my leave of Laufanne on the 11th of April 1758, with a mixture of joy and regret, in the firm refolution of revifiting, as a man, the perfons and places which had been fo dear to my youth. We travelled flowly, but pleafantly, in a hired coach, over the hills of Franche - comté and the fertile province of Lorraine, and paffed, without accident or inquiry, through feveral fortified towns of the French frontier: from thence we entered the wild Ardennes of the Austrian duchy of Luxembourg; and after croffing the Meufe at Liege, we traverfed the heaths of Brabant, and reached, on the fifteenth day, our Dutch garrifon of Bois le Duc. In our paffage through Nancy, my eve was gratified by the afpect of a regular and beautiful city, the work of Staniflaus, who, after the ftorms of Polifh royalty, repofed in the love and gratitude of his new fubjects of Lorraine. In our halt at Maestricht I visited Mr. de Beaufort, a learned eritic, who was known to me by his fpecious arguments againft the five firft centuries of the Roman Hiftory. After dropping my regimental companions, I ftepped afide to vifit Rotterdam and the Hague. I wifhed to have obferved a country, the monument of freedom and induftry; but my days were numbered, and a longer delay would have been ungraceful. I haftened to embark at the Brill, landed the next day at Harwich, and proceeded to London, where my father awaited my arrival. The whole term of my firft abfence from England was four years ten months and fifteen days.

In the prayers of the church our perfonal concerns are judicioufly reduced to the threefold diffinction of mind, body, and eflate. The fentiments of the mind excite and exercife our focial fympathy. The review of my moral and literary character is the moft interesting to myfelf and to the public; and I may expatiate, without reproach, on my private studies; fince they have produced the public writings, which can alone entitle me to the effeem and friendship of my readers. The experience of the world inculcates a different referve on the subject of our perfon and estate, and we soon learn that a free disclosure of our riches or poverty would provoke the malice of envy, or encourage the infolence of contempt.

The only perfon in England whom I was impatient to fee was my aunt Porten, the affectionate guardian of my tender years. I haftened to her houfe in College-ftreet, Westminster; and the evening was spent in the effusions of joy and confidence. It was not without fome awe and apprehension that I approached the prefence of my father. My infancy . to fpeak the truth, had been neglected at home ; the feverity of his look and language at our laft parting ftill dwelt on my memory; nor could I form any notion of his character, or my probable reception. They were both more agreeable than I could expect. The domeftic discipline of our ancestors has been relaxed by the philosophy and foftenss of the age; and if my father remembered that he had trembled before a ftern parent, it was only to adopt with his own fon an oppofite mode of behaviour. He received me as a man and a friend; all conftraint was banifhed at our first interview, and we ever afterwards continued on the fame terms of eafy and equal politenefs. He applauded the fuccefs of my education; every word and action was expreffive of the most cordial affection; and our lives would have paffed without a cloud, if his economy had been equal to his fortune, or if his fortune had been equal to his defires. During my absence he had married his fecond wife, Mils Dorothea Patton, who was introduced to me with the most unfavorable prejudice. I confidered his fecond marriage as an act of difpleafure, and I was difposed to hate the rival of my mother. But the injustice was in my own fancy. and the imaginary monfter was an amiable and deferving woman. I could not be miftaken in the first view of her understanding, her knowledge, and the elegant fpirit of her conversation; her polite welcome, and her affiduous care to fludy and gratify my willies, announced at leaft that the furface would be fmooth; and my fuspicions of art and falthood were gradually difpelled by the full difco. very of her warm and exquisite fensibility. After fome referve on my fide, our minds affociated in confidence and friendship; and as Mrs. Gibbon had neither children nor the hopes of children, we more eafily adopted the tender names and genuine characters of mother and of fon. By the indulgence of thefe parents, I was left at liberty to confult my tafte or reafon in the choice of place, of company, and of amufements ; and my excursions were bounded only by the limits of the ifland, and the measure of my income. Some faint efforts were made to procure me the employment of fecretary to a foreign embaffy; and I liftened to a fcheme which would again have transported me to the continent. Mrs. Gibbon, with feeming wildom, exhorted me to take chambers in the Temple, and devote my leifure to the ftudy of the law. I cannot repent of having neglected her advice. Few men, without the fpur of neceffity, have refolution to force their way through the thorns and thickets of that gloomy labyrinth. Nature had not endowed me with the bold and ready eloquence which makes itself heard amidst the tumult of the bar; and I fhould probably have been diverted from the labors of literature, without acquiring the fame or fortune of a fuccefsful pleader. I had no need to call to my aid the regular duties of a profession ; every day, every hour, was agreeably filled; nor have I known, like fo many of my countrymen, the tedioufnels of an idle life.

, 92

93

6

Of the two years (May 1758 – May 1760,) between my return to England and the embodying of

94

the Hampshire militia, I passed about nine months in London, and the remainder in the country. The metropolis affords many amufements, which are open to all. It is itfelf an aftonifhing and perpetual fpectacle to the curious eye; and each tafte, each fenfe may be gratified by the variety of objects which will occur in the long circuit of a morning walk. I affiduoufly frequented the theatres at a very propitious era of the stage, when a constellation of excellent actors, both in tragedy and comedy, was eclipfed by the meridian brightness of Garrick in the maturity of his judgment, and vigor of his performance. The pleafures of a town-life are within the reach of every man who is regardless of his health, his money, and his company. By the contagion of example I was fometimes feduced; but the better habits, which I had formed at Laufanne, induced me to feek a more elegant and rational fociety; and if my fearch was lefs eafy and fuccefsful than I might have hoped, I shall at prefent impute the failure to the difadvantages of my fituation and character. Had the rank and fortune of my parents given them an annual establishment in London, their own house would have introduced me to a numerous and polite circle of acquaintance. But my father's tafte had always preferred the highest and the lowest company, for which he was equally qualified; and after a twelve years retirement, he was no longer in the memory of the great with whom he had affociated. I found myself a stranger in the midst of a vast and unknown city; and at my entrance into life I was reduced to fome dull family parties, and fome fcattered connexions, which were not fuch as I fhould have chosen for myfelf. The most useful friends of my father were the Mallets : they received me with civility and kindness at first on his account, and afterwards on my own; (if I may use Lord Chefterfield's words) I was foon domesticated in their house. Mr. Mallet, a name among the English poets, is praifed by an unforgiving enemy, for the eafe and elegance of his conversation, and his wife was not deftitute of wit or learning. By his affiftance I was introduced to lady Hervey, the mother of the prefent earl of Briftol. Her age and infirmities confined her at home; her dinners were felect; in the evening her houfe was open to the best company of both fexes and all nations; nor was I difpleafed at her preference and affectation of the manners, the language, and the literature of France. But my progrefs in the English world was in general left to my own efforts, and those efforts were languid and flow. I had not been endowed by art or nature with those happy gifts of confidence and addrefs, which unlock every door and every bofom; nor would it be reafonable to complain of the just confequences of my fickly childhood, foreign education, and referved temper. While coaches were rattling through Bondftreet, I have paffed many a folitary evening in my lodging with my books. My ftudies were fometimes interrupted by a figh, which I breathed towards Laufanne; and on the approach of Spring, I withdrew without reluctance from the noify and extenfive scene of crowds without company, and diffipation without pleafure. In each of the twenty-five years of my acquaintance with London (1758-1783) the profpect gradually brightened; and this unfavorable picture most properly belongs to the first period after my return from Switzerland.

95

96

My father's relidence in Hampfhire, where I have paffed many light, and fome heavy hours, was at Beriton, near Petersfield, one mile from the Portfmouth road, and at the eafy diftance of fifty-eight miles from London. 25 An old manfion, in a flate of decay, had been converted into the fashion and convenience of a modern houle : and if ftrangers had nothing to fee, the inhabitants had little to defire. The fpot was not happily chosen, at the end of the village and the bottom of the hill: but the afpect of the adjacent grounds was various and cheerful; the downs commanded a noble profpect, and the long hanging woods in fight of the houfe could not perhaps have been improved by art or expense. My father kept in his own hands the whole of the eftate, and even rented fome additional land; and whatfoever might be the balance of profit and lofs. the farm fupplied him with amufement and plenty. The produce maintained a number of men and horfes, which were multiplied by the intermixture of domeftic and rural fervants; and in the intervals of labor the favorite team, a handfome fet of bays or grevs, was harneffed to the coach. The economy of the houfe was regulated by the tafte and prudence of Mrs. Gibbon. She prided herfelf in the elegance of her occafional dinners; and from the uncleanly avarice of Madame Pavilliard, I was fuddenly tranfported to the daily neatness and luxury of an English table.

97

table. Our immediate neighbourhood was rare and ruftic; but from the verge of our hills, as far as Chichefter and Goodwood, the western district of Suffex was interfperfed with noble feats and hofpitable families, with whom we cultivated a friendly, and might have enjoyed a very frequent, intercourfe. As my flav at Beriton was always voluntary, I was received and difmiffed with fmiles; but the comforts of my retirement did not depend on the ordinary pleafures of the country. My father could never infpire me with his love and knowledge of farming, I never handled a gun, I feldom mounted a horfe: and my philosophic walks were foon terminated by a fhady bench, where I was long detained by the fedentary amusement of reading or meditation. At home I occupied a pleafant and fpacious apartment: the library on the fame floor was foon confidered as my peculiar domain; and I might fay with truth. that I was never lefs alone than when by myfelf. My fole complaint, which I pioufly fuppreffed, arofe from the kind reftraint imposed on the freedom of my time. By the habit of early rifing I always fecured a facred portion of the day, and many fcattered moments were stolen and employed by my studious industry. But the family hours of breakfast, of dinner, of tea, and of fupper, were regular and long : after breakfaft Mrs. Gibbon expected my company in her dreffing-room; after tea my father claimed my converfation and the perufal of the newspapers; and in the midft of an interefting work I was often called down to receive the vifit of fome idle neighbours. Their dinners and vifits required, in due feafon, a fimilar return ; and I dreaded the period of the full moon, which was ufually referved for our more diftant excursions. I could not refuse attending my father, in the fummer of 1759, to the races at Stockbridge, Reading, and Odiam, where he had entered a horfe for the hunter's plate ; and I was not difpleafed with the fight of our Olympic games, the beauty of the fpot, the fleetness of the horses, and the gay tumult of the numerous spectators. As soon as the militia bufiness was agitated, many days were tedioufly confumed in meetings of deputy-lieutenants at Petersfield, Alton, and Winchefter. In the close of the fame year, 1759, Sir Simeon (then Mr.) Stewart attempted an unfuccefsful contest for the county of Southampton, against Mr. Legge, Chancellor of the Exchequer : a well known conteft, in which Lord Bute's influence was first exerted and cenfured. Our canvas at Portfmouth and Gofport lafted feveral days; but the interruption of my ftudies was compenfated in fome degree by the fpectacle of English manners, and the acquifition of fome practical knowledge.

VOL. I.

H

98

If in a more domestic or more diffipated scene my application was fomewhat relaxed, the love of knowledge was inflamed and gratified by the command of books; and I compared the poverty of Laufanne with the plenty of London. My father's study at Beriton was stuffed with much trass of the last age, with much high church divinity and politics, which have long fince gone to their proper place: yet it contained fome valuable editions of the classics and the fathers, the choice, as it should feem, of Mr.

00

Law; and many English publications of the times had been occafionally added. From this flender beginning I have gradually formed a numerous and felect library, the foundation of my works, and the best comfort of my life, both at home and abroad. On the receipt of the first quarter, a large share of my allowance was appropriated to my literary wants. I cannot forget the joy with which I exchanged a bank-note of twenty pounds for the twenty volumes of the Memoirs of the Academy of Inferiptions; nor would it have been easy, by any other expenditure of the fame fum, to have procured fo large and lafting a fund of rational amufement. At a time when I most affiduously frequented this school of ancient literature, I thus expressed my opinion of a learned and various collection, which fince the year 1759 has been doubled in magnitude, though not in merit - "Une de ces sociétés, qui ont mieux " immortalifé Louis XIV. qu'une ambition fouvent " pernicieuse aux hommes, commençoit deja ces " recherches qui réuniffent la justeffe de l'esprit, l'a-" ménité & l'érudition : où l'on voit tant de décou-" vertes, & quelquefois, ce qui ne cede qu'à peine " aux découvertes, une ignorance modefte & favante." The review of my library must be referved for the period of its maturity; but in this place I may allow myfelf to obferve, that I am not confeious of having ever bought a book from a motive of oftentation, that every volume, before it was depolited on the fhelf, was either read or fufficiently examined, and that I foon adopted the tolerating maxim of the elder Pliny, " nullum effe librum tam malum ut non ex

H 2,

100

" aliquâ parte prodeffet. " I could not yet find leifure or courage to renew the purfuit of the Greek language, excepting by reading the leffons of the Old and New Teftament every Sunday, when I attended the family to church. The feries of my Latin authors was lefs ftrenuoufly completed ; but the acquifition. by inheritance or purchase, of the best editions of Cicero, Quintilian, Livy, Tacitus, Ovid, &c. afforded a fair prospect, which I feldom neglected. I perfevered in the ufeful method of abstracts and obfervations; and a fingle example may fuffice, of a note which had almost fwelled into a work. The folution of a paffage of Livy (xxxviii. 38) involved me in the dry and dark treatifes of Greaves, Arbuthnot, Hooper, Bernard, Eifenschmidt, Gronovius, La Barré. Freret, &c.; and in my French effay (chap. 20.) I ridiculoufly fend the reader to my own manufcript remarks on the weights, coins, and measures of the ancients, which were abruptly terminated by the militia drum.

As I am now entering on a more ample field of fociety and fludy, I can only hope to avoid a vain and prolix garrulity, by over-looking the vulgar crowd of my acquaintance, and confining myfelf to fuch intimate friends among books and men, as are beft entitled to my notice by their own merit and reputation, or by the deep imprefilion which they have left on my mind. Yet I will embrace this occafion of recommending to the young fludent a practice, which about this time I myfelf adopted. After glancing my eye over the defign and order of a new book, I fulpended the perufal till I had finifhed the tafk of felf-examination, till I had revolved, in a folitary walk, all that I knew or believed, or had thought on the fubject of the whole work, or of fome particular chapter : I was then qualified to difcern how much the author added to my original ftock; and I was fometimes fatisfied by the agreement. I was fometimes armed by the opposition, of our ideas. The favorite companions of my leifure were our English writers fince the Revolution: they breathe the fpirit of reason and liberty; and they most feafonably contributed to reftore the purity of my own language, which had been corrupted by the long use of a foreign idiom. By the judicious advice of Mr. Mallet, I was directed to the writings of Swift and Addison; wit and fimplicity are their common attributes: but the ftyle of Swift is fupported by manly original vigor; that of Addifon is adorned by the female graces of elegance and mildnefs. The old reproach, that no British altars had been raised to the mule of hiftory, was recently difproved by the first performances of Robertson and Hume, the hiftories of Scotland and of the Stuarts. I will affume the prefumption of faying, that I was not unworthy to read them : nor will I difguife my different feelings in the repeated perufals. The perfect composition, the nervous language, the well-turned periods of Dr. Robertson, inflamed me to the ambitious hope that I might one day tread in his footfteps : the calm philosophy, the careless inimitable beauties of his friend and rival, often forced me to clofe the volume with a mixed fenfation of delight and defpair.

The defign of my first work, the Effay on the Study of Literature, was fuggested by a refinement of vanity, the defire of justifying and praifing the object of a favorite purfuit. In France, to which my ideas were confined, the learning and language of . Greece and Rome were neglected by a philosophic age. The guardian of those studies, the Academy of Infcriptions, was degraded to the loweft rank among the three royal focieties of Paris: the new appellation of Erudits was contemptuoufly applied to the fucceffors of Lipfius and Cafaubon ; and I was provoked to hear (fee M. d'Alembert Discours préliminaire à l'Encyclopédie) that the exercife of the memory, their fole merit, had been superfeded by the nobler faculties of the imagination and the judgment. I was ambitious of proving by my own example, as well as by my precepts, that all the faculties of the mind may be exercifed and difplayed by the fludy of ancient literature : I began to felect and adorn the various proofs and illustrations which had offered themfelves in reading the claffics ; and the first pages or chapters of my effay were composed before my departure from Laufanne. The hurry of the journey, and of the first weeks of my English life, fuspended all thoughts of ferious application : but my object was ever before my eyes; and no more than ten days. from the first to the eleventh of July, were fuffered to elapfe after my fummer eftablishment at Beriton. My effay was finished in about fix weeks; and as foon as a fair copy had been transcribed by one of the French prifoners at Petersfield, I looked round for a critic and judge of my first performance. A writer can feldom be content with the doubtful recompence of folitary approbation; but a youth ignorant of the world, and of himfelf, must defire to weigh his talents in fome scales less partial than his own : my conduct was natural, my motive laudable, my choice of Dr. Maty indicious and fortunate. By defcent and education Dr. Maty, though born in Holland, might be confidered as a Frenchman; but he was fixed in London by the practice of physic, and an office in the British Museum His reputation was justly founded on the eighteen volumes of the Journal Britannique. which he had fupported, almost alone, with perfeverance and fuccefs. This humble though ufeful labor, which had once been dignified by the genius of Bayle and the learning of Le Clerc, was not difgraced by the tafte, the knowledge, and the judgment of Maty: he exhibits a candid and pleafing view of the state of literature in England during a period of fix years (January 1750 - December 1755); and. far different from his angry fon, he handles the rod of criticifm with the tendernels and reluctance of a parent. The author of the Journal Britannique fometimes afpires to the character of a poet and philofopher: his ftyle is pure and elegant; and in his virtues. or even in his defects, he may be ranked as one of the last disciples of the school of Fontenelle. His answer to my first letter was prompt and polite : after a careful examination he returned my manufcript, with fome animadverfion and much applaufe; and when I vifited London in the enfuing winter, we discuffed the defign and execution in feveral free and familiar conversations. In a short excursion to Beriton I reviewed my effay, according to his friendly advice; and after suppressing a third, adding a third, and altering a third, I confummated my first labor by a fhort preface, which is dated February 3d, 1759. Yet I still thrank from the prefs with the terrors of virgin modefty : the manufcript was fafely depofited in my defk; and as my attention was engaged by new objects, the delay might have been prolonged till I had fulfilled the precept of Horace, "nonumque " prematur in annum." Father Sirmond, a learned jefuit, was still more rigid, fince he advifed a young friend to expect the mature age of fifty, before he gave himfelf or his writings to the public (Olivet Histoire de l'Académie Françoise, tom. ii. p. 143.). The counfel was fingular; but it is ftill more fingular that it fhould have been approved by the example of the author. Sirmond was himfelf fifty-five years of age when he published (in 1614) his first work, an edition of Sidonius Apollinaris, with many valuable annotations : (fee his life, before the great edition of his works in five volumes folio, Paris, 1696, é Typographia Regia).

H 3

102

103

H 4

104

Two years elapfed in filence : but in the fpring of 1761 I yielded to the authority of a parent, and complied, like a pious fon, with the wifh of my own heart ". My private refolves were influenced by the ftate of Europe. About this time the belligerent powers had made and accepted overtures of peace; our Englifh plenipotentiaries were named to affilf at the Congrefs of Augfburgh, which never met : I wifhed to attend them as a gentleman or a fecretary; and my father fondly believed that the proof of fome literary talents might introduce me to public notice, and fecond the recommendations of my friends. After a last revifal I confulted with Mr. Mallet and Dr. Maty, who approved the defign and promoted the execution. Mr. Mallet, after hearing me read my manufcript, received it from my hands, and delivered it into those of Becket, with whom he made an agreement in my name; an eafy agreement : I required only a certain number of copies; and, without transferring my property, I devolved on the bookfeller the charges and profits of the edition. Dr. Maty undertook, in my absence, to correct the sheets : he inferted, without my knowlege, an elegant and flattering epiftle to the author; which is composed. however, with fo much art, that, in cafe of a defeat, his favorable report might have been afcribed to the indulgence of a friend for the rafh attempt of a young Engli/h gentleman. The work was printed and published, under the title of Effai fur l'Etude de la Littérature, à Londres, chez T. Becket & P. A. de Hondt, 1761, in a small volume in duodecimo: my dedication to my father, a proper and pious addrefs, was composed the twenty-eighth of May: Dr. Maty's letter is dated the 16th of June; and I received the first copy (June 23d) at Alresford, two days before I marched with the Hampfhire militia. Some weeks afterwards, on the fame ground, I prefented my book to the late Duke of York, who breakfasted in Colonel Pitt's tent. By my father's direction, and Mallet's advice, many literary gifts were distributed to feveral eminent characters in England and France; two books were fent to the Count de Caylus, and the Ducheffe d'Aiguillon, at Paris: I had referved twenty copies for my friends at Laufanne, as the first fruits of my education, and a grateful token of my remembrance : and on all these perfons I levied an unavoidable tax of civility and compliment. It is not furprifing that a work, of which the ftyle and fentiments were fo totally foreign, fhould have been more fuccefsful abroad than at home. I was delighted by the copious extracts, the warm commendations, and the flattering predictions of the Journals of France and Holland: and the next year (1762) a new edition (I believe at Geneva) extended the fame, or at leaft the circulation, of the work. In England it was received with cold indifference, little read, and fpeedily forgotten : a fmall impreffion was flowly difperfed; the bookfeller murmured, and the author (had his feelings been more exquifite) might have wept over the blunders and baldnefs of the English tranflation. The publication of my Hiftory fifteen years afterwards revived the memory of my first performance, and the Effay was eagerly fought in the fhops. But I refused the permiffion which Becket folicited of reprinting it : the public curiofity was imperfectly fatisfied by a pirated copy of the bookfellers of Dublin; and when a copy of the original edition has been difcovered in a fale, the primitive value of half-a-crown has rifen to the fanciful price of a guinea or thirty fhillings.

106

I have expatiated on the petty circumftances and period of my first publication, a memorable era in the life of a student, when he ventures to reveal the measure of his mind : his hopes and fears are multiplied by the idea of felf-importance, and he believes for a while that the eyes of mankind are fixed on his perfon and performance. Whatever' may be my present reputation, it no longerrefts on the merit of this first effay ; and at the end of twenty - eight years I may appreciate my juvenile work with the impartiality, and almost with the indifference, of a stranger. In his answer to Lady Hervey, the Count de Caylus admires, or affects to admire, "les livres fans nombre " que Mr. Gibbon a lus & très-bien lus 17." But, alas ! my flock of erudition at that time was fcanty and fuperficial; and if I allow myfelf the liberty of naming the Greek mafters, my genuine and perfonal acquaintance was confined to the Latin claffics. The most ferious defect of my Effay is a kind of obfcurity and abruptnels which always fatigues, and may often elude, the attention of the reader. Inftead of a precife and proper definition of the title itfelf, the fenfe of the word Littérature is loofely and varioufly applied : a number of remarks and examples, hiftorical, critical, philosophical, are heaped on each other without method or connexion; and if we except fome introductory pages, all the remaining chapters might indifferently bereverled or transposed. The obscurity of many paffages is often affected, brevis effe laboro, obscurus fio; the defire of expressing perhaps a common idea with fententious and oracular brevity : alas ! how fatal has been the imitation of Montefquieu! But this obscurity sometimes proceeds from a mixture of light and darkness in the author's mind; from a partial ray which ftrikes upon an angle, inftead of foreading itfelf over the furface of an object. After this fair confession I shall prefume to fay, that the Effay does credit to a young writer of two-and-twenty years of age, who had read with tafte, who thinks with freedom, and who writes in a foreign language with fpirit and elegance. The defence of the early Hiftory of Rome and the new Chronology of Sir Ifaac Newton form a specious argument. The patriotic and political defign of the Georgics is happily conceived; and any probable conjecture, which tends to raife the dignity of the poet and the poem. deferves to be adopted, without a rigid fcrutiny. Some dawnings of a philosophic fpirit enlighten the general remarks on the fludy of hiftory and of man. I am not difpleafed with the inquiry into the origin and nature of the gods of polytheilm, which might deferve the illustration of a riper judgment. Upon the whole, I may apply to the first labor of my pen the fpeech of a far fuperior artift, when he furveyed the first productions of his pencil. After viewing fome portraits which he had painted in his youth, my friend Sir Jofhua Reynolds acknowledged to me. that he was rather humbled than flattered by the comparison with his prefent works; and that after fo much time and ftudy, he had conceived his improvement to be much greater than he found it to have been.

108

At Laufanne I composed the first chapters of my Effay in French, the familiar language of my conversation and studies, in which it was easier for me to write than in my mother-tongue. After my return to England I continued the fame practice, without any affectation, or defign of repudiating (as Dr. Bentley would fay)my vernacularidiom. But I should have escaped fome Anti-gallican clamor, had I been content with the more natural character of an English author. I fhould have been more confiftent had I rejected Mallet's advice, of prefixing an English dedication to a French book ; a confusion of tongues that feemed to accuse the ignorance of my patron. The use of a foreign dialect might be excused by the hope of being employed as a negociator, by the defire of being generally underftood on the continent; but my true motive was doubtlefs the ambition of new and fingular fame, an Englishman claiming a place among the writers of France. The Latin tongue had been confectated by the fervice of the church. it was refined by the imitation of the ancients : and in the fifteenth and fixteenth centuries the fcholars of Europe enjoyed the advantage, which they have gradually refigned, of converfing and writing in a common and learned idiom. As that idiom was no longer in any country the vulgar fpeech, they all ftood on a level with each other; yet a citizen of old Rome might have finiled at the best Latinity of the Germans and Britons; and we may learn from the Ciceronianus of Erasmus, how difficult it was found to steer a middle courfe between pedantry and barbarism. The Romans themselves had sometimes attempted a more perilous tafk, of writing in a living language, and appealing to the tafte and judgment of the natives. The vanity of Tully was doubly interested in the Greek memoirs of his own confulfhip; and if he modeftly supposes that some Latinisms might be detected in his style, he is confident of his own skill in the art of lfocrates and Ariftotle; and he requests his friend Atticus to dif-

TIO

perfe the copies of his work at Athens, and in the other cities of Greece, (ad Atticum, i. 19. ii. 1.) But it must not be forgotten, that from infancy to manhood Cicero and his contemporaries had read and declaimed, and composed with equal diligence in both languages; and that he was not allowed to frequent a Latin school till he had imbibed the lessons of the Greek grammarians and rhetoricians. In modern times, the language of France has been diffuled by the merit of her writers, the focial manners of the natives, the influence of the monarchy, and the exile of the protestants. Several foreigners have feized the opportunity of fpeaking to Europe in this common dialect, and Germany may plead the authority of Leibnitz and Frederic, of the first of her philoso. phers, and the greatest of her kings. The just pride and laudable prejudice of England has reftrained this communication of idioms; and of all the nations on this fide of the Alps, my countrymen are the least practifed, and least perfect in the exercise of the French tongue. By Sir William Temple and Lord Chefterfield it was only ufed on occafions of civility and bufinefs, and their printed letters will not be quoted as models of composition. Lord Bolingbroke may have published in French a sketch of his Reflections on Exile: but his reputation now repofes on the address of Voltaire, " Docti fermones utriusque lingua;" and by his English dedication to Oueen Caroline, and his Effay on Epic Poetry, it fhould feem that Voltaire himfelf wilhed to deferve a return of the fame compliment. The exception of Count Hamilton cannot fairly be urged ; though an Irifhman-

by birth, he was educated in France from his child. hood. Yet I am furprifed that a long refidence in England, and the habits of domeflic conversation, did not affect the eafe and purity of his inimitable ftyle; and I regret the omifion of his English verses, which might have afforded an amufing object of comparison. I might therefore affume the primus ego in patriam, bc.; but with what fuccefs I have explored this untrodden path must be left to the decifion of my French readers. Dr. Maty who might himfelf be queftioned as a foreigner, has fecured his retreat at my expense. "Je ne crois " pas que vous vous piquiez d'être moins facile à re-" connoître pour un Anglois que Lucullus pour un Romain." My friends at Paris have been more in. dulgent, they received me as a countryman, or at leaft as a provincial; but they were friends and Parifians". The defects which Maty infinuates, " Ces traits faillans, ces figures hardies, ce facrifice " de la règle au sentiment, & de la cadence à la force," are the faults of the youth, rather than of the ftranger : and after the long and laborious exercise of my own language, I am confcious that my French style has been ripened and improved.

I have already hinted, that the publication of my Effay was delayed till I had embraced the military profeffion. I fhall now amufe myfelf with the recollection of an active fcene, which bears no affinity to any other period of my fludious and focial life.

In the outfet of a glorious war, the English people had been defended by the aid of German mercenaries. A national militia has been the cry of every patriot fince the Revolution; and this measure, both in parliament and in the field, was fupported by the country gentlemen or Tories, who infenfibly transferred their loyalty to the boufe of Hanover: in the language of Mr. Burke, they have changed the idol, but they have preferved the idolatry. In the act of offering our names and receiving our commissions, as major and captain in the Hampfhire regiment, (June 12th. 1759,) we had not fuppofed that we fhould be. dragged away, my father from his farm, myfelf from my books, and condemned, during two years and a half, (May 10, 1760-December 23, 1762), to a wandering life of military fervitude. But a weekly or monthly exercise of thirty thoufand provincials would have left them ufelefs and ridiculous; and after the pretence of an invalion had vanished, the popularity of Mr. Pitt gave a fanction to the illegal ftep of keeping them till the end of the war under arms, in conftant pay and duty, and at a diftance from their respective homes. When the King's order for our embodying came down, it was too late to retreat, and too foon to repent. The South battalion of the Hamp. fhire militia was a small independent corps of four hundred and feventy - fix, officers and men, commanded by lieutenant-colonel Sir Thomas Worfley, who, after a prolix and paffionate conteft, delivered us from the tyranny of the lord lieutenant, the Duke of Bolton. My proper flation, as first captain, was at the head of my own. and afterwards of the grenadier, company; but in the the absence, or even in the presence, of the two field officers, I was intrusted by my friend and my father with the effective labor of dictating the orders, and exercifing the battalion. With the help of an original journal, I could write the hiftory of my bloodlefs and inglorious campaigns; but as those events have lost much of their importance in my own eyes, they shall be dispatched in a few words. From Winchefter, the first place of affembly, (June 4, 1760,) we were removed, at our own requeft, for the benefit of a foreign education. By the arbitrary, and often capricious, orders of the War-office, the battalion fucceffively marched to the pleafant and hospitable Blandford (June 17): to Hilfea barracks, a feat of difeafe and difcord (September 1); to Cranbrook in the weald of Kent (December 11); to the fea.coaft Dover (December 27); to Winchefter camp (June 25, 1761) to the populous and diforderly town of Devizes (October 23); to Salifbury (February 28, 1762); to our beloved Blandford a fecond time (March 9); and finally, to the falhionable refort of Southampton (June 2); where the colors were fixed till our final diffolution (December 23). On the beach at Dover we had exercifed in fight of the Gallic flores. But the most splendid and useful scene of our life was a four months encampment on Winchefter Down, under the command of the Earl of Effingham. Our army confifted of the thirty-fourth regiment of foot and fix militia corps. The confcioufnels of our defects was ftimulated by friendly emulation. We improved our time VOL. I.

112

Iniversitats- und Landesbibliothek Sachsen-Anha

and opportunities in morning and evening fielddays; and in the general reviews the South Hampfhire were rather a credit than a difgrace to the line. In our fubfequent quarters of the Devizes and Blandford, we advanced with a quick ftep in our military fludies; the ballot of the enfuing fummer renewed our vigor and youth; and had the militia fubfifted another year, we might have contefted the prize with the most perfect of our brethren.

The lofs of fo many bufy and idle hours was not compenfated by any elegant pleafure; and my temper was infenfibly foured by the fociety of our ruftic officers. In every flate there exifts, however, a balance of good and evil. The habits of a fedentary life were usefully broken by the duties of an active profession : in the healthful exercise of the field I hunted with a battalion, inftead of a pack; and at that time I was ready, at any hour of the day or night, to fly from quarters to London, from London to quarters, on the flighteft call of private or regimental bufinefs. But my principal obligation to the militia, was the making me an Englishman, and a foldier. After my foreign education, with my referved temper, I fhould long have continued a ftranger in my native country, had I not been shaken in this various scene of new faces and new friends : had not experience forced me to feel the characters of our leading, men, the flate of parties, the forms of office, and the operation of our civil and military fystem. In this peaceful fervice, I imbibed the rudiments of the language, and science of tastics, which opened a new field of study and observation. I diligently read, and meditated, the Mémoires Militaires of Quintus Icilius, (Mr. Guichardt,) the only writer who has united the merits of a professor and a veteran. The discipline and evolutions of a modern battalion gave me a clearer notion of the phalanx and the legion; and the captain of the Hampshire grenadiers (the reader may fmile) has not been useless to the historian of the Roman empire.

114

A youth of any fpirit is fired even by the play of arms, and in the first fallies of my enthusiasm I had ferioufly attempted to embrace the regular profession of a foldier. But this military fever was cooled by the enjoyment of our mimic Bellona, who foon unveiled to my eyes her naked deformity. How often did I figh for my proper station in fociety and letters. How often (a proud comparison) did I repeat the complaint of Cicero in the command of a provincial army : "Clitellæ " bovi funt impositæ. Est incredibile quam me " negotii tædeat. Non habet fatis magnum cam-" pum ille tibi non ignotus curfus animi; & induf-" triæ meæ præclara opera ceffat. Lucem, libros, ur-" bem, domum, vos defidero. Sed feram, ut potero ; " fit modo annuum. Si prorogatur, actum eft "?. " From a fervice without danger I might indeed have retired without difgrace; but as often as I hinted a with of refigning, my fetters were rivetted by the friendly intreaties of the colonel, the parental authorrity of the major, and my own regard for the honor and welfare of the battalion. When I felt that my perfonal escape was impracticable, I bowed my neck to the yoke: my fervitude was protracted far beyond the annual patience of Cicero; and it was not till after the preliminaries of peace that I received my difcharge, from the act of government which difembodied the militia.

12

TIG

When I complain of the lofs of time, justice to my felf and to the militia must throw the greatest part of that reproach on the first feven or eight months, while I was obliged to learn as well as to teach. The diffipation of Blandford, and the difputes of Portfmouth, confumed the hours which were not employed in the field; and amid the perpetual hurry of an inn, a barrack, or a guard-room, all literary ideas were banifhed from my mind. After this long faft, the longeft which I have ever known. I once more tafted at Dover the pleafures of reading and thinking; and the hungry appetite with which I opened a volume of Tully's philosophical works is ftill prefent to my memory. The laft review of my Effay before its publication, had prompted me to inveftigate the nature of the gods ; my inquiries led me to the Histoire Critique du Manichéisme of Beaufobre, who difcuffes many deep queftions of Pagan and Chriftian theology: and from this rich treasury of facts and opinions, I deduced my own confequences, beyond the holy circle of the author. After this recovery I never relapfed into indolence; and my example might prove, that in the life most averfe to ftudy, fome hours may be ftolen, fome minutes may be fnatched. Amidft the tumult of Winchefter camp I fometimes thought and read in my tent; in the more fettled quarters of the Devizes. Blandford, and Southampton, I always fecured a feparate lodging, and the neceffary books; and in the fummer of 1762, while the new militia was raifing, I enjoyed at Beriton two or three months of literary repofe³¹. In forming a new plan of fludy, I hefitated between the mathematics and the Greek language: both of which I had neglected fince my return from Laufanne. I confulted a learned and friendly mathematician, Mr. George Scott, a pupil of de Moivre; and his map of a country which I have never explored, may perhaps be more ferviceable to others ³². As foon as I had given the preference to Greek, the example of Scaliger and my own reason determined me on the choice of Homer, the father of poetry, and the Bible of the ancients: but Scaliger ran through the Iliad in one-and-twenty days; and I was not diffatisfied with my own diligence for performing the fame labor in an equal number of weeks. After the first difficulties were furmounted, the language of nature and harmony foon became eafy and familiar, and each day I failed. upon the ocean with a brifker gale and a more fleady courfe.

Έν δ΄άνεμος πείντεν μέσου ίςίου, 'αμφι δέ κύμα Στείρη πορθύβεον μεγάλ' 'ίαχε, υπός ίδοπς 'Η δ΄ θεεν κατά κύμα διαπεήσσουσα κέλευθα.''. Ilias, A. 481.

In the fludy of a poet who has fince become the moft intimate of my friends, I fucceffively applied many paffages and fragments of Greek writers; and among thefe I fhall notice a life of Homer, in the Opufcula Mythologica of Gale, feveral books of the geography of Strabo, and the entire treatife of Longinus, which, from the title and the ftyle, is equally worthy of the epithet of fublime. My grammatical fkill was improved, my vocabulary was enlarged; and in the militia I acquired a just and indelible knowledge of the first of languages. On every march, in every journey, Horace was always in my pocket, and often in my hand : but I should not mention his two critical epiftles, the amufement of a morning, had they not been accompanied by the elaborate commentary of Dr. Hurd, now Bifhop of Worcefter. On the interefting fubjects of compolition and imitation of epic and dramatic poetry. I prefumed to think for myfelf; and thirty clofewritten pages in folio could fcarcely comprife my full and free difcuffion of the fenfe of the mafter and the pedantry of the fervant 34.

I 3

After his oracle Dr. Johnfon, my friend Sir Jofhua Reynolds denies all original genius, any natural propenfity of the mind to one art or fcience rather than another. Without engaging in a metaphyfical or rather verbal difpute, I know, by experience, that from my early youth I afpired to the character of a hiftorian. While I ferved in the militia, before and after the publication of my effay, this idea ripened in my mind; nor can I paint in more lively colors the feelings of the moment, than by tranfcribing fome paffages, under their respective dates, from a journal which I kept at that time.

Beriton, April 14, 1761.

(In a fhort excursion from Dover.) " Having thought of feveral fubjects for a hif-

" torical composition, I chose the expedition of " Charles VIII. of France into Italy. I read two " memoirs of Mr. de Foncemagne in the Academy " of Infcriptions (tom. xvii. p. 539-607.), and " abstracted them. I likewise finished this day a " differtation, in which I examine the right of " Charles VIII. to the crown of Naples, and the " rival claims of the House of Anjou and Arragon: " it consists of ten folio pages, besides large " notes"."

Beriton, August 4, 1761.

(In a week's excursion from Winchefter camp.)

" After having long revolved fubjects for my " intended historical effay, I renounced my first " thought of the expedition of Charles VIII. as too " remote from us, and rather an introduction to " great events; than great and important in itfelf. I " fucceffively chofe and rejected the crufade of " Richard the First, the barons' wars against John " and Henry the Third, the hiftory of Edward the " Black Prince, the lives and comparisons of Henry " V. and the Emperor Titus, the life of Sir Philip " Sidney, and that of the Marquis of Montrofe. " At length I have fixed on Sir Walter Raleigh for " my hero. His eventful ftory is varied by the " characters of the foldier and failor, the courtier " and hiftorian; and it may afford fuch a fund of " materials as I defire, which have not yet been " properly manufactured. At prefent I cannot at-" tempt the execution of this work. Free leifure, and " the opportunity of confulting many books, both ⁴⁴ printed and manufcript, are as neceffary as they ⁴⁵ are impoffible to be attained in my prefent way ⁴⁶ of life. However, to acquire a general infight into ⁴⁶ my fubject and refources, I read the life of Sir ⁴⁷ Walter Raleigh by Dr. Birch, his copious article ⁴⁶ in the General Dictionary by the fame hand, ⁴⁷ and the reigns of Queen Elizabeth and James the ⁴⁶ Firft in Hume's Hiftory of England."

I 4

120

Beriton, January 1762.

(In a month's absence from the Devizes.]

"During this interval of repofe, I again turned my thoughts to Sir Walter Raleigh, and looked more clofely into my materials. I read the two volumes in quarto of the Bacon Papers, publifhed by Dr. Birch; the Fragmenta Regalia of Sir Robert Naunton, Mallet's Life of Lord Bacon, and the political treatifes of that great man in the firft volume of his works, with many of his letters in the fecond; Sir William Monfon's Naval Tracts, and the elaborate Life of Sir Walter Raleigh, which Mr. Oldys has prefixed to the beft edition of his Hiftory of the World. My fubject opens upon me, and in general improves upon a nearer profpect."

Beriton, July 26, 1762.

(During my fummer refidence.)

" I am afraid of being reduced to drop my hero; but my time has not, however, been loft in the refearch of his ftory, and of a memorable era of our Englifh annals. The Life of Sir Walter Raleigh,

" by Oldys, is a very poor performance ; a fervile " panegyric, or flat apology, tedioully minute, and " composed in a dull and affected ftyle. Yet the " author was a man of diligence and learning, who " had read every thing relative to his fubject, and " whole ample collections are arranged with per-" fpicuity and method. Excepting fome anecdotes " lately revealed in the Sidney and Bacon Papers, " I know not what I fhould be able to add. My " ambition (exclusive of the uncertain merit of ftyle " and fentiment) must be confined to the hope of " giving a good abridgment of Oldys. I have even " the difappointment of finding fome parts of this " copious work very dry and barren; and thefe " parts are unluckily fome of the most characteristic: " Raleigh's colony of Virginia, his quarrels with " Effex, the true fecret of his confpiracy, and, above " all the detail of his private life, the most effential " and important to a biographer. My beft refource " would be in the circumjacent hiftory of the times, " and perhaps in fome digreffions artfully introduced, " like the fortunes of the Peripatetic philosophy in " the portrait of Lord Bacon. But the reigns of " Elizabeth and James the First are the periods of " English hiftory, which have been the most variously " illustrated : and what new lights could I reflect on " a fubject, which has exercifed the accurate in-" duftry of Birch, the lively and curious acuteness " of Walpole, the critical fpirit of Hurd, the vigor-" ous fense of Mallet and Robertson, and the im-" partial philosophy of Hume? Could I even fur-" mount these obstacles, I should shrink with ter-

122

" ror from the modern hiftory of England, where " every character is a problem, and every reader a " friend or an enemy; where a writer is fuppofed " to hoift a flag of party, and is devoted to dam-" nation by the adverfe faction. Such would be " my reception at home: and abroad, the hiftorian " of Raleigh muft encounter an indifference far " more bitter than cenfure or reproach. The events " of his life are interefting; but his character is " ambiguous, his actions are obfcure, his writings " are Englifh, and his fame is confined to the narrow " limits of our language and our ifland. I muft " embrace a fafer and more extensive theme.

" There is one which I fhould prefer to all others, " The history of the liberty of the Swifs, of that in-" dependence which a brave people refcued from " the Houfe of Auftria, defended against a Dauphin " of France, and finally fealed with the blood of " Charles of Burgundy. From fuch a theme, fo " full of public fpirit, of military glory, of examples " of virtue, of leffons of government, the dulleft " ftranger would catch fire : what might not Ihope, " whofe talents, whatfoever they may be, would be " inflamed with the zeal of patriotifm. But the " materials of this hiftory are inacceffible to me, " fast locked in the obscurity of an old barbarous " German dialect, of which I am totally ignorant. " and which I cannot refolve to learn for this fole " and peculiar purpofe.

" I have another fubject in view, which is the contraft of the former hiftory: the one a poor, warlike, virtuous republic, which emerges into " glory and freedom; the other a commonwealth. " foft, opulent, and corrupt; which, by just degrees, " is precipitated from the abufe to the lofs of her " liberty: both leffons are, perhaps, equally inftruc-" tive. This fecond fubject is, The Hiftory of the " Republic of Florence, under the Houfe of Medicis: " a period of one hundred and fifty years, which " rifes or defcends from the dregs of the Florentine " democracy, to the title and dominion of Cofmo " de Medicis in the Grand Duchy of Tufcany. I " might deduce a chain of revolutions not unworthy " of the pen of Vertot; fingular men, and fingular " events; the Medicis four times expelled, and as " often recalled; and the Genius of Freedom reluc-" tantly yielding to the arms of Charles V. and the " policy of Colmo. The character and fate of " Savanerola, and the revival of arts and letters in " Italy, will be effentially connected with the eleva-" tion of the family and the fall of the republic. The " Medicis (ftirps qualifataliter nata ad inftauranda " vel fovenda Audia (Lipfius ad Germanos & Gallos, " Epift. viii.) were illustrated by the patronage of " learning; and enthuliafm was the most formidable " weapon of their adversaries. On this splendid " fubject I shall most probably fix; but where, or " how will it be executed? I behold in a dark and " doubtful perspective."

Res altà terrà, & caligine merfus 36.

The youthful habits of the language and manners of France had left in my mind an ardent defire of revifiting the Continent on a larger and more liberal plan. According to the law of cuftom, and perhaps of reafon, foreign travel completes the education of an English gentleman : my father had confented to my wifh, but I was detained above four years by my rafh engagement in the militia. I eagerly grafoed the first moments of freedom : three or four weeks in Hampfhire and London were employed in the preparations of my journey, and the farewel vifits of friendfhip and civility : my laft act in town was to applaud Mallet's new tragedy of Elvira "; a poftchaife conveyed me to Dover, the packet to Boulogne, and fuch was my diligence, that I reached Paris on the 28th of January 1763, only thirty-fix days after the difbanding of the militia. Two or three years were loofely defined for the term of my absence; and I was left at liberty to spend that time in fuch places and in fuch a manner as was moft agreeable to my tafte and judgment.

124

In this first visit I passed three months and a half. (January 28 - May 9,) and a much longer fpace might have been agreeably filled, without any intercourfe with the natives. At home we are content to move in the daily round of pleafure and bufinefs; and a fcene which is always prefent is fuppofed to be within our knowledge, or at least within our power. But in a foreign country, curiofity is our bufinefs and our pleafure; and the traveller, confcious of his ignorance, and covetous of his time, is diligent in the fearch and the view of every object that can deferve his attention. I devoted many hours of the morning to the circuit of Paris and the neighbourhood, to the vifit of churches and palaces confpicuous by their architecture, to the royal manufactures, collections of books and pictures, and all the various treasures of art, of learning, and of luxury. An Englifhman may hear without reluctance, that in these curious and coftly articles Paris is fuperior to London; fince the opulence of the French capital arifes from the defects of its government and religion. In the absence of Louis XIV. and his fucceffors, the Louvre has been left unfinished : but the millions which have been lavished on the fands of Verfailles, and the morafs of Marli, could not be fupplied by the legal allowance of a British king. The splendor of the French nobles is confined to their town refidence : that of the English is more usefully distributed in their country feats; and we fhould be aftonifhed at our own riches, if the labors of architecture, the fpoils of Italy and Greece, which are now fcattered from Inverary to Wilton, were accumulated in a few ftreets between Marybone and Westminster. All fuperfluous ornament is rejected by the cold frugality of the protestants; but the catholic superstition, which is always the enemy of reafon, is often the parent of the arts. The wealthy communities of priefts and monks expend their revenues in ftately edifices; and the parish church of St. Sulpice, one of the noblest ftructures in Paris, was built and adorned by the private industry of a late curé. In this outfet, and still more in the fequel of my tour, my eye was amufed : but the pleafing vision cannot be fixed by the pen; the particular images are darkly feen through the medium of five-and-twenty years, and the narrative of my life must not degenerate into a book of travels ".

But the principal end of my journey was to enjoy the fociety of a polifhed and amiable people, in whofe favor I was ftrongly prejudiced, and to converfe with fome authors, whofe converfation, as I fondly imagined, muft be far more pleafing and inftructive than their writings. The moment was happily chofen. At the clofe of a fuccefsful war the Britifh name was refpected on the continent.

Clarum & venerabile nomen

Gentibus.

126

Our opinions, our fashions, even our games, were adopted in France, a ray of national glory illuminated each individual, and every Englishman was supposed to be born a patriot and a philosopher. For myfelf. I carried a perfonal recommendation ; my name and my Effay were already known; the compliment of having written in the French language entitled me to fome returns of civility and gratitude. I was confidered as a man of letters, who wrote for amufement. Before my departure I had obtained from the Duke de Nivernois, Lady Hervey, the Mallets, Mr. Walpole, &c. many letters of recommendation to their private or literary friends. Of thefe epiftles the reception and fuccefs were determined by the character and fituation of the perfons by whom and to whom they were addreffed : the feed was fometimes caft on a barren rock, and it fometimes multiplied a hundred fold in the production of new fhoots, foreading branches, and exquifite fruit. But upon the whole, I had reafon to praife the national urbanity. which from the court has diffused its gentle influence to the fhop, the cottage, and the fchools. Of the men of genius of the age, Montesquieu and Fontenelle were no more; Voltaire refided on his own estate near Geneva; Rouffeau in the preceding year had been driven from his hermitage of Montmorency; and I blufh at my having neglected to feek. in this journey, the acquaintance of Buffon. Among the men of letters whom I faw. D'Alembert and Diderot held the foremost rank in merit, or at least in fame. I shall content myfelf with enumerating the well-known names of the Count de Caylus, of the Abbés de la Bleterie, Barthelemy, Raynal, Arnaud, of Meffieurs de la Condamine, du Clos, de Ste Palave, de Bougainville, Caperonnier, de Guignes, Suard, &c. without attempting to diferiminate the fhades of their characters, or the degrees of our connexion. Alone. in a morning visit, I commonly found the artifts and authors of Paris lefs vain, and more reafonable, than in the circles of their equals, with whom they mingle in the houfes of the rich. Four days in a week I had a place, without invitation, at the hospitable tables of Mefdames Geoffrin and du Bocage, of the celebrated Helvetius, and of the Baron d'Olbach. In thefe fympofia the pleafures of the table were improved by lively and liberal conversation; the company was felect, though various and voluntary ".

127

The fociety of Madame du Bocage was more foft and moderate than that of her rivals, and the evening converfations of M. de Foncemagne were fupported by the good fenfe and learning of the principal members of the Academy of Inferiptions. The opera and the Italians I occafionally vifited; but the French theatre, both in tragedy and comedy, was my daily and favorite amufement. Two famous actreffes then divided the public applaufe. For my own part, I preferred the confummate art of the Clairon, to the intemperate fallies of the Dumefnil, which were extolled by her admirers, as the genuine voice of nature and paffion.Fourteen weeks infenfibly ftole away; but had I been rich and independent, I fhould have prolonged, and perhaps have fixed, my refidence at Paris.

128

Between the expensive ftyle of Paris and of Italy it was prudent to interpofe fome months of tranquil fimplicity; and at the thoughts of Laufanne I again lived in the pleafures and ftudies of my early youth. Shaping my courfe through Dijon and Befancon, in the laft of which places I was kindly entertained by my coufin Acton, I arrived in the month of May 1763 on the banks of the Leman Lake. It had been my intention to pafs the Alps in the autumn, but fuch are the fimple attractions of the place, that the year had almost expired before my departure from Laufanne in the enfuing fpring. An absence of five years had not made much alteration in manners, or even in perfons. My old friends, of both fexes, hailed my voluntary return; the most genuine proof of my attachment. They had been flattered by the prefent of my book, the produce of their foil; and the good Pavilliard fhed tears of joy as he embraced a pupil, whofe literary merit he might fairly impute to his own labors. To my old lift I added fome new acquaintance, and among the Arangers I fhall diftinguifh Prince Lewis of Wirtemberg, the brother of the reigning Duke, at whole country house, near Laufanne, I frequently dined : a wandering meteor, and at length a falling ftar, his light and ambitious fpirit had fucceffively dropped from the firmament of of Pruffia, of France, and of Auftria; and his faults, which he ftyled his misfortunes, had driven him into philosophic exile in the Pays de Vaud. He could now moralize on the vanity of the world, the equality of mankind, and the happiness of a private station. His addrefs was affable and polite, and as he had fhone in courts and armies, his memory could fupply, and his eloquence could adorn, a copious fund of interefting anecdotes. His first enthufiafm was that of charity and agriculture; but the fage gradually lapfed in the faint, and Prince Lewis of Wirtemberg is now buried in a hermitage near Mayence, in the last flage of mystic devotion, By fome ecclesiastical quarrel, Voltaire had been provoked to withdraw himfelf from Laufanne, and retire to his caftle at Ferney, where I again vifited the poet and the actor. without feeking his more intimate acquaintance, to which I might now have pleaded a better title. But the theatre which he had founded, the actors whom he had formed, furvived the loss of their mafter; and recent from Paris, I attended with pleafure at the representation of feveral tragedies and comedies. I fhall not defcend to fpecify particular names and characters; but I cannot forget a private inflitution, which will difplay the innocent freedom of Swifs manners. My favorite fociety had alfumed, from the age of its members, the proud denomination of the fpring (la fociété du printems.) It confifted of fifteen or twenty young unmarried ladies, of genteel, though not of the very first families ; the eldest perhaps about twenty, all agreeable, feveral handfome, and two or three of exquisite beauty. At each other's houfes they affembled almost every day, without the control, or even the prefence, of a mother or an aunt; they were trufted to their own prudence, among a crowd of young men of every nation in Europe. They laughed, they fung, they danced, they played at cards, they acted comedies; but in the midft of this carelefs gaiety, they respected themfelves, and were refpected by the men; the invifible line between liberty and licentiousnefs was never transgreffed by a gefture, a word, or a look, and their virgin chaftity was never fullied by the breath of fcandal or fuspicion. A fingular inftitution, expreflive of the innocent fimplicity of Swifs manners. After having tafted the luxury of England and Paris, I could not have returned with fatisfaction to the coarfe and homely table of Madame Pavilliard : nor was her hufband offended that I now entered myfelf as a pensionnaire, or boarder, in the elegant houfe of Mr. De Mefery, which may be entitled to a fhort remembrance, as it has flood above twenty years, perhaps, without a parallel in Europe. The house in which we lodged was spacious and convenient, in the best street, and commanding, from behind, a noble profpect over the country and the Lake. Our table was ferved with neatnefs and plenty; the boarders were felect; we had the liberty of inviting any guefts at a ftated price ; and in the fummer the fcene was occafionally transferred to a pleafant villa, about a league from Laufanne. The characters of Master and Mistrefs were happily fuited to each other, and to their fituation. At the age of feventy-five, Madame de Mefery, who has furvived her hufband, is ftill a graceful, I had almost faid a handfome woman. She was alike qualified to prefide in her kitchen and her drawing-room; and fuch was the equal propriety of her conduct, that of two or three hundred foreigners, none ever failed in respect, none could complain of her neglect, and none could ever boaft of her favor. Mefery himfelf, of the noble family of De Croufaz, was a man of the world, a jovial companion, whole eafy manners and natural fallies maintained the cheerfulnefs of his houfe. His wit could laugh at his own ignorance: he difguifed, by an air of profusion, a strict attention to his interest ; and in this fituation, he appeared like a nobleman who fpent his fortune and entertained his friends. In this agreeable fociety I refided nearly eleven months (May 1763-April 1764;) and in this fecond visit to Laufanne, among a crowd of my English companions, I knew and effeemed Mr. Holroyd (now Lord Sheffield;) and our mutual attachment was renewed and fortified in the fubfequent stages of our Italian journey. Our lives are in the power of chance, and a flight variation on either fide, in time or place, might have deprived me of a friend, whole activity in the ardor of youth was always prompted by a benevolent heart, and directed by a ftrong understanding ".

VOL. I.

K

130

I3E

If my fludies at Paris had been confined to the fludy of the world, three or four months would not have been unprofitably fpent. My vifits, however fuperficial, to the Academy of Medals and the public libraries, opened a new field of inquiry; and the view of fo many manufcripts of different ages and characters induced me to confult the two great Benedictine works, the Diplomatica of Mabillon, and the Paleographia of Montfaucon. I ftudied the theory without attaining the practice of the art: nor fhould I complain of the intricacy of Greek abbreviations and Gothic alphabets, fince every day, in a familiar language, I am at a loss to decipher the hieroglyphics of a female note. In a tranquil fcene . which revived the memory of my first studies, idlenefs would have been lefs pardonable: the public libraries of Laufanne and Geneva liberally fupplied me with books; and if many hours were loft in diffipation, many more were employed in literary labor. In the country, Horace and Virgil, Juvenal and Ovid, were my affiduous companions: but, in town, I formed and executed a plan of ftudy for the ufe of my Tranfalpine expedition: the topography of old Rome, the ancient geography of Italy, and the fcience of medals. I. I diligently read, almost always with my pen in my hand, the elaborate treatifes of Nardini, Donatus, &c. which fill the fourth volume of the Roman Antiquities of Grævius. 2. I next undertook and finished the Italia Antiqua of Cluverius, a learned native of Pruffia, who had measured, on foot, every spot, and has compiled and digefted every paffage of the ancient writers, These paffages in Greek or Latin authors I perused in the text of Cluverius, in two folio volumes : but I feparately read the defcriptions of Italy by Strabo. Pliny, and Pomponius Mela, the Catalogues of the Epic poets, the Itineraries of Weffeling's Antoninus, and the coafting Voyage of Rutilius Numatianus; and I fludied two kindred fubjects in the Mefures Itinéraires of d'Anville, and the copious work of Bergier, Histoire des grands Chemins de l'Empire Romain. From these materials I formed a table of roads and diftances reduced to our English measure; filled a folio common-place book with my collections and remarks on the geography of Italy; and inferted in my journal many long and learned notes on the infulæ and populousnels of Rome, the focial war, the paffage of the Alps by Hannibal, &c. 3. After glancing my eye over Addifon's agreeable dialogues. I more ferioufly read the great work of Ezechiel Spanheim de Prastantia & Ulu numismatum, and applied with him the medals of the kings and emperors, the families and colonies, to the illustration of ancient history. And thus was I armed for my Italian journey ".

K 2

122

I fhall advance with rapid brevity in the narrative of this tour, in which fomewhat more than a year (April 1764—May 1765) was agreeably employed. Content with tracing my line of march, and flightly touching on my perfonal feelings, I fhall wave the minute inveftigation of the fcenes which have been viewed by thoufands, and defcribed by hundreds, of our modern travellers. R O M E is the great object of our pilgrimage: and 1ft, the journey; 2d, the refidence; and 3d, the return; will form the moft proper and perfpicuous division. 1. I climbed Mount Cenis, and defcended into the plain of Piedmont, not on the back of an elephant, but on a light ofier feat, in the hands of the dextrous and intrepid chairmen of the Alps. The architecture and government of Turin prefented the fame aspect of tame and tirefome uniformity: but the court was regulated with decent and fplendid economy; and I was introduced to his Sardinian majefty 42 Charles Emanuel. who, after the incomparable Frederic, held the fecond rank (proximus longo tamen intervallo) among the kings of Europe. The fize and populouf. nefs of Milan could not furprife an inhabitant of London: but the fancy is amufed by a vifit to the Boromean Iflands, an enchanted palace, a work of the fairies in the midft of a lake encompaffed with mountains, and far removed from the haunts of men. I was lefs amufed by the marble palaces of Genoa, than by the recent memorials of her deliverance (in December 1746) from the Auftrian tyranny; and I took a military furvey of every fcene of action within the enclofure of her double walls. My fteps were detained at Parma and Modena, by the precious relics of the Farnele and Efte collections: but, alas! the far greater part had been already tranfported, by inheritance or purchase, to Naples and Drefden. By the road of Bologna and the Apennine I at last reached Florence, where I reposed from June to September, during the heat of the fummer months. In the Gallery, and efpecially in the Tri. bune, I first acknowledged, at the feet of the Venus of Medicis, that the chifel may difpute the preeminence with the pencil, a truth in the fine arts which cannot on this fide of the Alps be felt or understood, At home I had taken some lessons of Italian : on the fpot I read, with a learned native, the claffics of the Tufcan idiom : but the fhortness of my time, and the use of the French language, prevented my acquiring any facility of fpeaking; and I was a filent spectator in the conversations of our envoy, Sir Horace Mann, whole most ferious bufinels was that of entertaining the English at his hospitable table ". After leaving Florence, I compared the folitude of Pifa with the industry of Lucca and Leghorn, and continued my journey through Sienna to Rome, where I arrived in the beginning of October. 2. My temper is not very fusceptible of enthusiafm; and the enthuliafm which I do not feel, I have ever fcorned to affect. But, at the diftance of twentyfive years, I can neither forget nor express the ftrong emotions which agitated my mind as I first approached and entered the eternal city. After a fleeplefs night, I trod, with a lofty ftep, the ruins of the Forum ; each memorable fpot where Romulus flood, or Tully fpoke, or Cæfar fell, was at once prefent to my eye; and feveral days of intoxication were loft or enjoyed before I could descend to a cool and minute investigation. My guide was Mr. Byers, a Scotch antiquary of experience and tafte; but, in the daily labor of eighteen weeks, the powers of attention were fometimes fatigued, till I was myfelf qualified, in a laft review, to felect and fludy the capital works of ancient and modern art. Six weeks were borrowed for my tour of Naples, the most populous of cities, relative to its fize, whofe luxurious inhabitants feem to dwell on the confines of paradife and hell-fire. I was prefented to the boy-king by our new envoy, Sir William Hamilton; who, wifely diverting his correspondence from the fecretary of State to the K 4

K 3

134

n 4

126

Royal fociety and Britifh Mufeum, has elucidated a country of fuch ineftimable value to the naturalift and antiquarian. On my return, I fondly embraced, for the last time, the miracles of Rome; but I departed without kiffing the feet of Rezzonico (Clement XIII.) who neither poffeffed the wit of his predeceffor Lambertini, nor the virtues of his fucceffor Ganganelli. 3. In my pilgrimage from Rome to Loretto I again croffed the Apennine; from the coaft of the Adriatic I traverfed a fruitful and populous country, which could alone disprove the paradox of Montesquieu, that modern Italy is a defert. Without adopting the exclusive prejudice of the natives. I fincerely admire the paintings of the Bologna. school. I hastened to escape from the fad solitude of Ferrara, which in the age of Cæfar was ftill more defolate. The spectacle of Venice afforded fome hours of aftonifhment; the university of Padua is a dying taper: but Verona ftill boafts her amphitheatre; and his native Vicenza is adorned by the claffic architecture of Palladio: the road of Lombardy and Piedmont (did Montesquien find them without inhabitants?) led me back to Milan, Turin, and the paffage of Mount Cenis, where I again croffed the Alps in my way to Lyons.

The use of foreign travel has been often debated as a general question; but the conclusion must be finally applied to the character and circumstances of each individual. With the education of boys, where or how they may pass over some juvenile years with the least mischief to themselves or others, I have no concern. But after supposing the previous and indifpenfable requifites of age, judgment, a competent knowledge of men and books, and a freedom from domeftic prejudices, I will briefly describe the qualifications which I deem most effential to a traveller. He fhould be endowed with an active, indefatigable vigor of mind and body, which can feize every mode of conveyance, and fupport, with a carelefs fmile, every hardfhip of the road, the weather, 'or the inn. The benefits of foreign travel will correspond with the degrees of these qualifications; but, in this fketch, those to whom I am known will not accufe me of framing my own panegyric. It was at Rome, on the 15th of October 1764, as I fat musing amidst the ruins of the Capitol, while the bare footed friars were finging vefpers in the Temple of Jupiter ", that the idea of writing . the decline and fall of the city first started to my mind. But my original plan was circumferibed to the decay of the city rather than of the empire: and, though my reading and reflections began to point towards that object, fome years elapfed, and feveral avocations intervened, before I was ferioufly engaged in the execution of that laborious work.

I had not totally renounced the fouthern provinces of France, but the letters which I found at Lyons were expressive of fome impatience. Rome and Italy had fatiated my curious appetite, and I was now ready to return to the peaceful retreat of my family and books. After a happy fortnight I reluctantly left Paris, embarked at Calais, again landed at Dover, after an interval of two years and five months, and hastily drove through the fummer dust and folitude of London. On the 25th of June

138

1765 I arrived at my father's house: and the five years and a half between my travels and my father's death (1770) are the portion of my life which I paffed with the least enjoyment, and which I remember with the least fatisfaction. Every fpring I attended the monthly meeting and exercise of the militia at Southampton; and by the refignation of my father, and the death of Sir Thomas Worfley, I was fucceffively promoted to the rank of major and lieutenant-colonel commandant: but I was each year more difgusted with the inn, the wine, the company, and the tirefome repetition of annual attendance and daily exercife. At home, the economy of the family and farm still maintained the fame creditable appearance. My connexion with Mrs. Gibbon was mellowed into a warm and folid attachment: my growing years abolifhed the diftance that might yet remain between a parent and a fon, and my behaviour fatisfied my father, who was proud of the fuccefs, however imperfect in his own life-time, of my literary talents. Our folitude was foon and often enlivened by the vifit of the friend of my youth, Mr. Deyverdun, whofe absence from Laufanne I had fincerely lamented. About three years after my first departure, he had emigrated from his native lake to the banks of the Oder in Germany. The res angusta domi, the waste of a decent patrimony, by an improvident father, obliged him, like many of his countrymen, to confide in his own industry; and he was intrusted with the education of a young prince, the grandfon of the Margrave of Schavedt, of the Royal Family of Pruffia. Our friendship was never cooled, our correspondence was fometimes interrupted; but I rather wifhed than hoped to obtain Mr. Devverdun for the companion of my Italian tour. An unhappy, though honorable paffion, drove him from his German court; and the attractions of hope and curiofity were fortified by the expectation. of my speedy return to England. During four fucceffive fummers he paffed feveral weeks or months at Beriton, and our free conversations, on every topic that could interest the heart or understanding. would have reconciled me to a defert or a prifon. In the winter months of London my fphere of knowledge and action was fomewhat enlarged, by the many new acquaintance which I had contracted in the militia and abroad; and I must regret, as more than an acquaintance, Mr. Godfrey Clarke of Derbyfhire, an amiable and worthy young man, who was fnatched away by an untimely death. A weekly convivial meeting was established by myself and travellers, under the name of the Roman Club ".M

The renewal, or perhaps the improvement, of my Englifh life was imbittered by the alteration of my own feelings. At the age of twenty - one I was, in my proper flation of a youth, delivered from the yoke of education, and delighted with the comparative flate of liberty and affluence. My filial obedience was natural and eafy; and in the gay profpect of futurity, my ambition did not extend beyond the enjoyment of my books, my leifure, and my patrimonial eflate, undiffurbed by the cares of a family and the duties of a profeffion. But in the militia I was armed with power; in my travels, I was exempt from control; and as I approached, as I gradually paffed my thirtieth year, I began to feel the defire of being mafter in my own house. The most gentle authority will fometimes frown without reafon, the most cheerful fubmission will sometimes murmur without caufe; and fuch is the law of our imperfect nature, that we must either command or obey; that our perfonal liberty is supported by the obsequious. nels of our own dependants. While fo many of my acquaintance were married or in parliament, or advancing with a rapid ftep in the various roads of honor and fortune, I ftood alone, immoveable and infignificant; for after the monthly meeting of 1770. I had even withdrawn myfelf from the militia, by the refignation of an empty and barren commiffion. My temper is not fusceptible of envy, and the view of fuccefsful merit has always excited my warmeft applaufe. The miferies of a vacant life were never known to a man whole hours were infufficient for the inexhauftible pleafures of ftudy. But I lamented that at the proper age I had not embraced the lucrative purfuits of the law or of trade, the chances of civil office or India adventure, or even the fat flumbers of the church ; and my repentance became more lively as the lofs of time was more irretrievable. Experience flowed me the use of grafting my private confequence on the importance of a great professional body; the benefits of those firm connexions which are cemented by hope and interest, by gratitude and emulation, by the mutual exchange of fervices and favors. From the emoluments of a profession I might have derived an ample fortune, or a competent income, inftead of being finted to the fame parrow allowance, to be increafed only by an event which I fincerely deprecated. The progrefs and the knowledge of our domeftic diforders aggravated my anxiety, and I began to apprehend that I might be left in my old age without the fruits either of induftry or inheritance.

140

In the first fummer after my return, whilst I enjoyed at Beriton the fociety of my friend Deyverdun, our daily conversations expatiated over the field of ancient and modern literature; and we freely difcuffed my ftudies, my first Effay, and my future projects. The Decline and Fall of Rome I still contemplated at an awful diftance: but the two hiftorical defigns which had balanced my choice were fubmitted to his tafte; and in the parallel between the Revolutions of Florence and Switzerland, our common partiality for a country which was his by birth, and mine by adoption, inclined the fcale in favor of the latter. According to the plan, which was foon conceived and digefted, I embraced a period of two hundred years, from the affociation of the three peafants of the Alps to the plenitude and profperity of the Helvetic body in the fixteenth century. I fhould have defcribed the deliverance and victory of the Swifs, who have never fhed the blood of their tyrants but in a field of battle; the laws and manners of the confederate states; the splendid trophies of the Auftrian, Burgundian, and Italian wars; and the wifdom of a nation, who, after fome fallies of martial adventure, has been content to guard the bleffings of peace with the fword of freedom.

142

— Manus hæc inimica tyrannis Enfe petit placidam fub libertate quietem.

My judgment, as well as my enthuliafm, was fatiffied with the glorious theme; and the affiftance of Devverdun feemed to remove an infuperable obftacle. The French or Latin memorials, of which I was not ignorant, are inconfiderable in number and weight; but in the perfect acquaintance of my friend with the German language. I found the key of a more valuable collection. The most necessary books were procured; he translated, for my ule, the folio volume of Schilling, a copious and contemporary relation of the war of Burgundy; we read and marked the most interesting parts of the great chronicle of Tfchudi; and by his labor, or that of an inferior affiftant, large extracts were made from the Hiftory of Lauffer and the Dictionary of Lew : yet fuch was the diftance and delay, that two years elapfed in thefe preparatory fleps; and it was late in the third fummer (1767) before I entered, with thefe flender materials, on the more agreeable talk of composition. A fpecimen of my Hiftory, the first book, was read the following winter in a literary fociety of foreigners in London; and as the author was unknown, I listened, without observation, to the free strictures. and unfavorable fentence, of my judges ". The momentary fenfation was painful; but their condemnation was ratified by my cooler thoughts. I delivered my imperfect fheets to the flames *7, and forever renounced a defign in which fome expense, much labor, and more time, had been fo vainly confumed. I cannot regret the lofs of a flight and fuperficial effay; for fuch the work must have been in the hands of a ftranger, uninformed by the fcholars and statefmen, and remote from the libraries and archives of the Swifs republics. My ancient habits, and the prefence of Deyverdun, encouraged me to write in French for the continent of Europe ; but I was confcious myfelf that my ftyle, above profe and below poetry, degenerated into a verbole and turgid declamation. Perhaps I may impute the failure to the injudicious choice of a foreign language. Perhaps I may fufpect that the language itfelf is ill adapted to fustain the vigor and dignity of an important narrative. But if France, fo rich in literary merit, had produced a great original hiftorian, his genius would have formed and fixed the idiom to the proper tone. the peculiar mode of historical eloquence.

It was in fearch of fome liberal and lucrative employment that my friend Deyverdun had vifited England. His remittances from home were feanty and precarious. My purfe was always open, but it was often empty; and I bitterly felt the want of riches and power, which might have enabled me to correct the errors of his fortune. His wifhes and qualifications folicited the flation of the travelling governor of fome wealthy pupil; but every vacancy provoked fo many eager candidates, that for a long time I flruggled without fuccefs; nor was it till after much application that I could even place him as a clerk in the office of the fecretary of flate. In a refidence of feveral years he never acquired the juft pronunciation and familiar ufe of the Englifh tongue.

144

but he read our most difficult outbors with eafe and tafte: his critical knowledge of our language and poetry was fuch as few foreigners have polleffed; and few of our countrymen could enjoy the theatre of Shake peare and Garrick with more exquilite feeling and difcernment. The confcioufnels of his own ftrength, and the affurance of my aid, emboldened him to imitate the example of Dr. Maty, whole Journal Britannique was effeemed and regretted; and to improve his model, by uniting with the tranfactions of literature a philosophic view of the arts and manners of the British nation. Our Journal for the vear 1767, under the title of Mémoires Littéraires de la Grande Bretagne, was foon finished and fent to the prefs. For the first article, Lord Lyttelton's History of Henry II. I must own myself responsible; but the public has ratified my judgment of that voluminous work, in which fenfe and learning are not illuminated by a ray of genius. The next fpecimen was the choice of my friend, the Bath Guide, a light and whimfical performance, of local, and even verbal, pleafantry. I started at the attempt: he fmiled at my fears: his courage was justified by fuccels; and a mafter of both languages will applaud the curious felicity with which he has transfuled into French profe the fpirit, and even the humor, of the English verfe. It is not my wilh to deny how deeply I was interested in these Memoirs, of which I need not furely be ashamed; but at the distance of more than twenty years, it would be impossible for me to afcertain the respective shares of the two affociates. A long and intimate communication of ideas had calt our

our fentiments and ftyle in the fame mould. In our focial labors we composed and corrected by turns : and the praife which I might honeftly beftow, would fall perhaps on fome article or paffage most properly my own. A fecond volume (for the year 1768) was published of these Memoirs. I will prefume to fay. that their merit was superior to their reputation; but it is not lefs true, thas they were productive of more reputation than emolument. They introduced my friend to the protection, and myfelf to the acquaint. ance, of the Earl of Chefterfield, whole age and infirmities feeluded him from the world; and of Mr. David Hume, who was under fecretary to the office in which Devverdun was more humbly employed. The former accepted a dedication, (April 12th. 1769.) and referved the author for the future education of his fucceffor: the latter enriched the Journal with a reply to Mr. Walpole's Hiftorical Doubts. which he afterwards fhaped into the form of a note. The materials of the third volume were almost completed, when I recommended Deyverdun as governor to Sir Richard Worfley, a youth, the fon of my old Lieutenant - colonel, who was lately deceafed. They fet forwards on their travels; nor did they return to England till fome time after my father's death.

My next publication was an accidental fally of love and refentment; of my reverence for modelt genius, and my averfion for infolent pedantry. The fixth book of the Æneid is the most pleasing and perfect composition of Latin poetry. The defcent of Æneas and the Sybil to the infernal regions, to the world of fpirits, expands an awful and boundlefs profpect, from the nocturnal gloom of the Cumzan grot,

VOL. I.

Ibant obscuri sola sub nocie per umbram, to the meridian brightness of the Elyssian fields:

Largior hic campos æther & lumine veflit Purpureo _____ from the dreams of fimple Nature, to the dreams, alas! of Egyptian theology, and the philosophy of the Greeks. But the final difmiffion of the hero through the ivory gate, whence feems to diffolve the whole enchantment, and leaves the reader in a state of cold and anxious scepticism. This most lame and impotent conclusion has been varioufly imputed to the tafte or irreligion of Virgil; but, according to the more elaborate interpretation of Bifhop Warburton, the defcent to hell is not a falle, but a mimic scene; which represents the initiation of Æneas, in the character of a lawgiver, to the Eleufinian mysteries. This hypothefis, a fingular chapter in the Divine Legation of Mofes, had been admitted by many as true; it was praifed by all as ingenious; nor had it been exposed, in a space of thirty years, to a fair and critical difcuffion. The learning and the abilities of the author had raifed him to a just eminence; but he reigned the dictator and tyrant of the world of literature. The real merit of Warburton was degraded by the pride and prefumption with which he pronounced his infallible decrees;

Falfa ad cælum mittunt infomnia manes .

147

in his polemic writings he lathed his antagonifts without mercy or moderation; and his fervile flatterers, (fee the bafe and malignant Effay on the Delicacy of Friend/hip,) exalting the mafter critic far above Aristotle and Longinus, affaulted every modest diffenter who refused to confult the oracle, and to adore the idol. In a land of liberty, fuch defpotifm muft provoke a general opposition, and the zeal of oppofition is feldom candid or impartial. A late professor of Oxford, (Dr. Lowth.) in a pointed and polified epiftle, (August 31R, 1765,) defended himfelf, and attacked the Bifhop; and, whatfoever might be the merits of an infignificant controverly, his victory was clearly established by the filent confusion of Warburton and his flaves. I too, without any private offence, was ambitious of breaking a lance against the giant's shield; and in the beginning of the year 1770, my Critical Observations on the Sixth Book of the Eneid were fent, without my name, to the prefs. In this fort Effay, my first English publication. I aimed my ftrokes against the perfon and the hypothefis of Bifhop Warburton. I proved, at leaft to my own fatisfaction, that the ancient law givers did not invent the mysteries, and that Eneas was never invefted with the office of lawgiver : that there is not any argument, any circumftance, which can melt a fable into allegory, or remove the feene from the Lake Avernus to the Temple of Ceres : that fuch a wild fuppolition is equally injurious to the poet and the man: that if Virgil was not initiated he could not, if he were he would not, reveal the fecrets of the initiation: that the anathema of Horace (vctabo qui Cereris facrum vulgarit, &c) at once attefts his own ignorance and the innocence of his friend. As the Bifhop of Gloucefter and his party maintained a discreet filence, my critical disquisition was soon lost among the pamphlets of the day; but the public coldnefs was overbalanced to my feelings by the weighty approbation of the laft and beft editor of Virgil. Profeffor Heyne of Gottingen, who acquiefces in my confutation, and ftyles the unknown author, doctus - - - & elegantifimus Britannus. But I cannot refift the temptation of transcribing the favorable judgment of Mr. Hayley, himfelf a poet and a fcholar: " An intricate hypothesis, twifted into a long " and labored chain of quotation and argument, the " Differtation on the Sixth Book of Virgil, remained " fome time unrefuted. ---- At length, a fuperior, " but anonymous, critic arofe, who, in one of the " most judicious and spirited effays that our nation " has produced, on a point of claffical literature, " completely overturned this ill-founded edifice. " and exposed the arrogance and futility of its affum-" ing architect." He even condefcends to juffify an acrimony of ftyle, which had been gently blamed by the more unbiaffed German; " Paullo acrius quam. " velis ---- perstrinxit "." But I cannot forgive myfelf the contemptuous treatment of a man who, with all his faults, was entitled to my efteem "; and I can lefs forgive, in a perfonal attack, the cowardly concealment of my name and character.

L 2

148

In the fifteen years between my Effay on the Study of Literature and the first volume of the Decline and Fall, (1761 - 1776) this criticism on Warburton, and fome articles in the Journal, were my fole publications. It is more especially incumbent on me to mark the employment, or to confess the vafte of time, from my travels to my father's death, an interval in which I was not diverted by any professional duties from the labors and pleafures of a studious life. 1. As foon as I was releafed from the fruitlefs talk of the Swifs revolutions, (1768.) I began gradually to advance from the wifh to the hope, from the hope to the defign, from the defign to the execution, of my historical work, of whofe limits and extent I had yet a very inadequate notion. The Claffics, as low as Tacitus, the younger Pliny, and Juvenal, were my old and familiar companions. I infenfibly plunged into the ocean of the Augustan history; and in the defcending feries I inveftigated, with my pen almost always in my hand, the original records, both Greek and Latin, from Dion Caffius to Ammianus Marcellinus, from the reign of Trajan to the laft age of the Western Cæfars. The subsidiary rays of medals, and inferiptions of geography and chronology, were thrown on their proper objects; and I applied the collections of Tillemont, whole inimitable accuracy almost affumes the character of genius, to fix and arrange within my reach the loofe and fcattered atoms of historical information. Through the darknefs of the middle ages I explored my way in the Annals and Antiquities of Italy of the learned Muratori; and diligently compared them with the parallel or transverse lines of Sigonius and Maffei, Baronius and Pagi, till I almost grasped the ruins of Rome in the fourteenth century, without fulpecting that this final chapter must be attained by the labor of fix quartos and twenty years. Among the books which I purchased, the Theodofian Code, with the commentary of James Godefroy, must be gratefully remembered. I used it (and much I used it) as a work of history, rather than of jurisprudence : but in every light it may be confidered as a full and capacious repolitory of the political flate of the empire in the fourth and fifth centuries. As I belived, and as I ftill believe, that the propagation of the Golpel, and the triumph of the church, are infeparably connected with the decline of the Roman monarchy. I weighed the caufes and effects of the revolution. and contrafted the narratives and apologies of the Christians themselves, with the glances of candor or enmity which the Pagans have caft on the rifing fects. The Jewish and Heathen testimonies, as they are collected and illustrated by Dr. Lardner, directed. without fuperfeding, my fearch of the originals ; and in an ample differtation on the miraculous darknefs of the paffion, I privately drew my conclutions from the filence of an unbelieving age. I have affembled the preparatory fludies, directly or indirectly relative to my hiftory; but, in firict equity, they must be foread beyond this period of my life, over the two fummers (1771 and 1772) that elapfed between my father's death and my fettlement in London. 2. In a free conversation with books and men, it would be endlefs to enumerate the names and characters of all who are introduced to our acquaintance; but in this general acquaintance we may felect the degrees of friendship and efteem. According to the wife maxim, Multum legere potius quam multa. I reviewed, again and again, the immortal works of the French and English, the Latin and Italian claffics. My Greek studies (though lefs affiduous than I defigned) maintained and extended my knowledge of that incomparable idiom. Homer and Xenophon were ftill my favorite authors; and I had almost prepared for the prefs an Effay on the Cyropædia, which in my own judgment, is not unhappily labored. After a certain age, the new publications of merit are the fole food of the many ; and the moft auftere student will be often tempted to break the line, for the fake of indulging his own curiofity, and of providing the topics of fashionable currency. A more refpectable motive may be affigned for the third perufal of Blackstone's Commentaries, and a copious and critical abstract of that English work was my first ferious production in my native language. 3. My literary leifure mas much lefs complete and independent than it might appear to the eye of a ftranger. In the hurry of London I was deftitue of books ; in the folitude of Hampshire I was not master of my-time. My quiet was gradually difturbed by our domeftic anxiety, and I fhould be afhamed of my unfeeling philosophy, had I found much time or tafte for fludy in the last fatal fummer (1770) of my father's decay and diffolution.

140

L 3

350

The difembodying of the militia at the clofe of the war (1763) had reftored the major (a new Cincinnatus) to a life of agriculture. His labors were useful his pleafures innocent, his wiftes moderate; and my father feemed to enjoy the flate of happines which is celebrated by poets and philosophers, as the most agreeable to nature, and the least accessible to fortune.

L4

> Beatus ille, qui procul negotils (Ut prisca gens mortalium) Paterna rura bubus exercet suis, Solutus omni sanore³⁰. Hor. Epod. ii.

But the last indespensable condition, the freedom from debt, was wanting to my father's felicity; and the vanities of his youth were feverely punished by the folicitude and forrow of his declining age. The first mortgage, on my teturn from Laufanne, (1758.) had afforded him a partial and transient relief. The annual demand of intereft and allowance was a heavy deduction from his income; the militia was a fource of expense, the farm in his hands was not a profitable adventure, he was loaded with the cofts and damages of an obfolete law-fuit; and each year multiplied the number, and exhaufted the patience, of his creditors. Under these painful circumstances, I confented to an additional mortage, to the fale of Putney, and to every facrifice that could alleviate his diffrefs. But he was no longer capable of a rational effort and his reluctant delays postponed not the evils themfelves, but the remedies of those evils (remedia malorum potius quam mala differebat). The pangs of fhame, tendernefs, and felf-reproach, inceffantly preyed on his vitals, his conftitution was broken; he loft his ftrength and his fight; the rapid progrefs of a dropfy admonished him of his end, and he funk into the grave on the 10th November 1770, in the fixty fourth year of his age. A family-tradition infinuates that Mr. William Law had drawn his pupil in the light and inconstant character of Flatus, who is ever confident, and ever difappointed in the chafe of happinefs. But thefe conflitutional failings were happily compenfated by the virtues of the head and heart, by the warmest fentiments of honor and humanity. His graceful perfon, polite addrefs, gentle. manners, and unaffected cheerfulnels, recommended him to the favor of every company; and in the change of times and opinions, his liberal fpirit had long fince delivered him from the zeal and prejudice of a Tory education. I fubmitted to the order of Nature ; and my grief was foothed by the confcious fatisfaction that I had difcharged all the duties of filial piety.

153

As foon as I had paid the laft folemn duties to my father, and obtained, from time and reafon, a tolerable composure of mind, I began to form the plan of an independent life, most adapted to my circumstances and inclination. Yet fo intricate was the net, my efforts were fo awkward and feeble, that nearly two years (November 1770-October 1772) were fuffered to elapfe before I could difentangle myfelf from the management of the farm, and transfer my refidence from Beriton to a houfe in London. During this interval I continued to divide my year between town and the country; but my new fituation was brightened by hope; my ftay in London was prolonged into the fummer; and the uniformity of the fummer was occasionally broken by vifits and excursions at a distance from home.

154

The gratification of my defires (they were not immoderate) has been feldom difappointed by the want of money or credit; my pride was never infulted by the vifit of an importunate tradefman; and my transient anxiety for the past or future has been difpelled by the fludious or focial occupation of the prefent hour. My confeience does not accufe me of any act of extravagance or injustice, and the remnant of my eftate affords an ample and honorable provision for my declining age. I shall not expatiate on my economical affairs, which cannot be inftructive or amufing to the reader. It is a rule of prudence, as well as of politenefs, to referve fuch confidence for the ear of a private friend, without exposing our fituation to the envy or pity of ftrangers; for envy is productive of hatred, and pity borders too nearly on contempt. Yet I may believe, and even affert, that in circumstances more indigent or more wealthy, I fhould never have accomplished the tafk, or acquired the fame, of a hiftorian; that my fpirit would have been broken by poverty and contempt. and that my industry might have been relaxed in the labor and luxury of a fuperfluous fortune.

I had now attained the first of earthly bleffings, independence: I was the absolute master of my hours and actions: nor was I deceived in the hope that the establishment of my library in town would allow me to divide the day between study and fociety. Each year the circle of my acquaintance, the number of my dead and living companions, was enlarged. To a lover of books, the shops and fales of London present irressible temptations; and the manufacture of my history required a various and growing flock of materials. The militia, my travels, the Houfe of Commons, the fame of an author, contributed to multiply my connexions: I was chosen a member of the fashionable clubs; and . before I left England in 1783, there were few perfons of any eminence in the literary or political world to whom I was a ftranger ". It would moft affuredly be in my power to amufe the reader with a gallery of portraits and a collection of anecdotes. But I have always condemned the practice of transforming a private memorial into a vehicle of fatire or praife. By my own choice I paffed in town the greatest part of the year; but whenever I was defirous of breathing the air of the country, I poffeffed a hofpitable retreat at Sheffield-place in Suffex, in the family of my valuable friend Mr. Holroyd, whofe character, under the name of Lord Sheffield, has fince been more confpicuous to the public.

155

No fooner was I fettled in my houfe and library, than I undertook the composition of the first volume of my History. At the outfet all was dark and doubtful; even the title of the work, the true era of the Decline and Fall of the Empire, the limits of the introduction, the division of the chapters, and the order of the narrative; and I was often tempted to caft away the labor of feven years. The ftyle of an author should be the image of his mind, but the choice and command of language is the fruit of exercife. Many experiments were made before I could hit the middle tone between a dull chronicle and a rhetorical declamation: three times did I compofe the first chapter, and twice the fecond and third, before I was tolerably fatisfied with their effect. In the remainder of the way I advanced with a more equal and eafy pace; but the fifteenth and fixteenth chapters have been reduced by three fuceffive revifals, from a large volume to their prefent fize; and they might ftill be compreffed, without any lofs of facts or fentiments. An opposite fault may be imputed to the concife and fuperficial narrative of the firft reigns from Commodus to Alexander: a fault of which I have never heard, except from Mr. Hume in his last journey to London. Such an oracle might have been confulted and obeyed with rational devotion; but I was foon difgusted with the modest practice of reading the manufcript to my friends. Of fuch friends fome will praife from politenefs, and fome will criticife from vanity. The author himfelf is the beft judge of his own performance; no one has fo deeply meditated on the fubject; no one is fo fincerely interefted in the event.

156

By the friendfhip of Mr. (now Lord) Eliot, who had married my first coufin, I was returned at the general election for the borough of Leskeard. I took my feat at the beginning of the memorable contest between Great Britain and America, and supported, with many a fincere and filent vote, the rights, though not, perhaps, the interest, of the mother country. After a fleeting illusive hope, prudence condemned me to acquiesce in the humble station of a mute. I was not armed by Nature and education with the intrepid energy of mind and voice.

Vincentem strepitus, & natum rebus agendis. Timidity was fortified by pride, and even the success of my pen difcouraged the trial of my voice. 52 But I affifted at the debates of a free affembly; I liftened to the attack and defence of eloquence and reafon ; I had a near profpect of the characters, views, and paffions of the first men of the age. The cause of government was ably vindicated by Lord North, a ftatefman of footlefs integrity, a confummate mafter of debate, who could wield, with equal dexterity. the arms of reason and of ridicule. He was seated on the Treafury bench between his Attorney and Solicitor General, the two pillars of the law and fate, magis pares quam fimiles; and the minister might indulge in a' fhort flumber, whilft he was upbolden on either hand by the majeftic fense of Thurlow. and the fkilful eloquence of Wedderburne. From the adverfe fide of the houfe an ardent and powerful opposition was supported, by the lively declamation of Barré, the legal acuteness of Dunning, the profule and philosophic fancy of Burke, and the argumentative vehemence of Fox, who in the conduct of a party approved himfelf equal to the conduct of an empire. By fuch men every operation of peace and war, every principle of juffice or policy, every queftion of authority and freedom, was attacked and defended; and the fubject of the momentous contest was the union or feparation of Great Britain and America. The eight feffions that I fat in parliament were a school of civil prudence, the first and most effential virtue of a historian.

157

The volume of my Hiftory, which had been fomewhat delayed by the novelty and tumult of a first feffion, was now ready for the prefs. After the 158 perilous adventure had been declined by my friend Mr. Elmfly, I agreed, upon eafy terms, with Mr. Thomas Cadell, a refpectable bookfeller, and Mr. William Strahan, an eminent printer; and they undertook the care and rifk of the publication. which derived more credit from the name of the fhop than from that of the author. The laft revifal of the proofs was fubmitted to my vigilance; and many blemishes of flyle, which had been invisible in the manufcript, were difcovered and corrected in the printed fheet. So moderate were our hopes. that the original impression had been stinted to five hundred, till the number was doubled by the prophetic tafte of Mr. Strahan. During this awful interval I was neither elated by the ambition of fame, nor depressed by the apprehension of contempt. My diligence and accuracy were attefted by my own confcience. Hiftory is the moft popular species of writing, fince it can adapt itfelf to the highest or the lowest capacity. I had chosen an illustrious fubject. Rome is familiar to the fchool-boy and the ftatefman; and my narrative was deduced from the last period of claffical reading. I had likewise flattered myself, that an age of light and liberty would receive, without fcandal, an inquiry into the human caufes of the progress and establishment of Christianity.

I am at a lofs how to defcribe the fuccefs of the work, without betraying the vanity of the writer. The first impression was exhausted in a few days; a fecond and third edition were fcarcely adequate to the demand; and the bookfeller's property was twice invaded by the pirates of Dublin. My book was on every table, and almost on every toilette; the hiltorian was crowned by the tafte or fashion of the day; nor was the general voice diffurbed by the barking of any profane critic. The favor of mankind is most freely bestowed on a new acquaintance of any original merit; and the mutual furprife of the public and their favorite is productive of those warm fensibilities, which at a fecond meeting can no longer be rekindled. If I liftened to the mulic of praise, I was more feriously fatisfied with the approbation of my judges. The candor of Dr. Robertson embraced bis disciple. A letter from Mr. Hume overpaid the labor of ten years; but I have never prefumed to accept a place in the triumvirate of Britifh hiftorians.

159

That ourious and original letter will amufe the reader, and his gratitude flould fhield my free communication from the reproach of vanity.

DEAR SIR, EDINBURGH, 18th March 1776. "As I ran through your volume of hiftory with great avidity and impatience, I cannot forbear difcovering fomewhat of the fame impatience in returning you thanks for your agreeable prefent, and expreffing the fatisfaction which the performance has given me. Whether I confider the dignity of your ftyle, the depth of your matter, or the extenfivenels of your learning, I must regard the work as equally the object of efteem; and I own that if I had not previously had the happinels of your perfonal acquaintance, fuch a performance from an Englifhman in our age would have given me fome furprife. You may fmile at this fentiment; but as it feems to me that your countrymen, for almoft a whole generation, have given themfelves up to barbarous and adfurd faction, and have totally neglected all polite letters, I no longer expected any valuable production ever to come from them. I know it will give you pleafure (as it did me) to find that all the men of letters in this place concur in their admiration of your work, and in their anxious define of your continuing it.

urn-nhn-de-aby-3-1-700122-n0179-0

"When I heard of your undertaking, (which was fometime ago, I own I was a little curious to fee how you would extricate yourfelf from the fubject of your two last chapters. I think you have observed a very prudent temperament; but it was impoffible to treat the fubject fo as not to give grounds of fuspicion against you, and you may expect that a clamor will arife. This, if any thing, will retard your fuccefs with the public; for in every other respect your work is calculated to be popular. But among many other marks of decline. the prevalence of fuperflition in England prognofticates the fall of philosophy and decay of tafte; and though nobody be more capable than you to revive them, you will probably find a ftruggle in your first advances.

" I fee you entertain a great doubt with regard to the authenticity of the poems of Offian. You are certainly right in fo doing. It is indeed firange that any men of fenfe could have imagined it poffible, poffible, that above twenty thousand verfes, along with numberless historical facts, could have been preferved by oral tradition during fifty generations, by the rudes, perhaps, of all the European nations, the most necessitions, the most turbulent, and the most unfettled. Where a supposition is so contrary to common fense, any positive evidence of it ought never to be regarded. Men run with great avidity to give their evidence in favor of what flatters their passions and their national prejudices. You are therefore over and above indulgent to us in speaking of the matter with hestation.

160

" I muft inform you that we are all very anxious to hear that you have fully collected the materials for your fecond volume, and that you are even confiderably advanced in the composition of it. I fpeak this more in the name of my friends than in my own; as I cannot expect to live fo long as to fee the publication of it. Your enfuing volume will be more delicate than the preceding, but I truft in your prudence for extricating you from the difficulties; and, in all events, you have courage to defpife the clamor of bigots.

I am, with great regard,

Dear Sir,

Your most obedient, and most humble Servant,

DAVID HUME."

Some weeks afterwards I had the melancholy pleafure of feeing M. Hume in his paffage through London; his body feeble, his mind firm. On the 25th of August of the fame year (1776) he died, at Edinburgh, the death of a philofopher.

VOL. I.

IVI

162

My fecond excursion to Paris was determined by the preffing invitation of M. and Madame Necker. who had vifited England in the preceding fummer. On my arrival I found M. Necker Director-general of the finances, in the first bloom of power and popularity. His private fortune enabled him to fupport a liberal establishment; and his wife, whofe talents and virtues I had long admired, was admirably qualified to prefide in the conversation of her table and drawing room. As their friend, I was introduced to the beft company of both fexes; to the foreign ministers of all nations, and to the first names and characters of France ; who diftinguifhed me by fuch marks of civility and kindnefs, as gratitude will not fuffer me to forget, and modefty will not allow me to enumerate. The fathionable fuppers often broke into the morning hours; yet I occafionally confulted the Royal Library, and that of the Abbey of St. Germain, and in the free ufe of their books at home, I had always reafon to praife the liberality of those inftitutions. The fociety of men of letters I neither courted nor declined; but I was happy in the acquaintance of M. de Buffon, who united with a fublime genius the most amiable fimplicity of mind and manners. At the table of my old friend, M. de Foncemagne, I was involved in a difpute with the Abbé de Mably; and his jealous irafcible fpirit revenged itfelf on a work which he was incapable of reading in the original.

As I might be partial in my own caufe, I fhall transcribe the words of an unknown critic, observing only, that this difpute had been preceded by another on the English constitution at the house of the Countess de Froulay, and old Jansenist lady.

" Vous étiez chez M. de Foncemagne, mon cher " Theodon, le jour que M. l'Abbé de Mably & " M. Gibbon y dinèrent en grande compagnie. " La conversation roula presque entièrement sur " l'histoire. L'Abbé étant un profond politique, " la tourna fur l'dministration, quand on fut au " deffert: & comme par caractère, par humeur, par " l'habitude d'admirer Tite Live, il ne prise que " le système républicain, il se mit à vanter l'excel-" lence des républiques; bien perfuadé que le fa-" vant Anglois l'approuveroit en tout, & admire-" roit la profondeur de génie qui avoit fait deviner " tous ces avantages à un François. Mais M. Gib-" bon, instruit par l'expérience des inconvéniens d'un " gouvernement populaire, ne fut point du tout de " fon avis, & il prit généreusement la défense du gou-" vernement monarchique. L'Abbé voulut le con-" vaincre par Tite Live, & par quelques argumens " tirés de Plutarque en favour des Spartiates. M. "Gibbon, doué de la mémoire la plus heureufe, & « avant tous les faits présens à la pensée, domina " bien-tôt la conversation ; l'Abbé se fâcha, il s'em-" porta, il dit des choses dures; l'Anglois, confer-" vant le phlegme de son pays, prenoit ses avanta-" ges, & preffoit l'Abbé avec d'autant plus de fuc-" cès que la colère le troubloit de plus en plus. " La conversation s'échauffoit, & M. de Fonce-" magne la rompit en se levant de table, & en passant " dans le falon, où personne ne fut tenté de la M 2

164

" renouer." Supplément de la Manière d'écrire l'Histoire, p. 125, &c. "

Nearly two years had elapfed between the publication of my first and the commencement of my fecond volume; and the caufes muft be affigned of this long delay. 1. After a fhort holiday, I indulged my curiofity in fome ftudies of a very different nature, a courfe of anatomy, which was demonftrated by Doctor Hunter ; and fome leffons of chymiftry, which were delivered by Mr. Higgins. The principles of these fciences, and a tafte for books of natural hiftory, contributed to multiply my ideas and images; and the anatomist and chymist may sometimes track me in their own fnow. 2 I dived. perhaps too deeply, into the mud of the Arian controverfy; and many days of reading, thinking, and writing were confumed in the purfuit of a phantom. 3. It is difficult to arrange, with order and perfpicuity, the various transactions of the age of Con-Rantine ; and fo much was I difpleafed with the firft effay, that I committed to the flames above fifty fheets. 4. The fix months of Paris and pleafure must be deducted from the account. But when I refumed my tafk I felt my improvement; I was now mafter of my ftyle and fubject, and while the meafure of my daily performance was enlarged, I difcovered lefs reafon to cancel or correct. It has always been my practice to caft a long parapraph in a fingle mould, to try it by my ear, to deposit it in my memory, but to fufpend the action of the pen till I had given the last polish to my work. Shall 1 add, that I never found my mind more vigorous, nor my composition more happy, than in the winter hurry of fociety and parliament?

165

Had I believed that the majority of English readers were fo fondly attached even to the name and fhadow of Chriftianity; had I forefeen that the pious, the timid, and the prudent, would feel, or affect to feel. with fuch exquifite fenfibility; I might, perhaps, have fostened the two invidious chapters, which would create many enemies, and concilitate few friends. But the fhaft was fhot, the alarm was founded, and I could only rejoice, that if the voice of our priefts was clamorous and bitter, their hands were difarmed from the powers of perfecution. I adhered to the wife refolution of trufting myfelf and my writings to the candor of the public, till Mr. Davies of Oxford prefumed to attack, not the faith, but the fidelity, of the hiftorian. My Vindication, expreffive of lefs anger than contempt, amused for a moment the bufy and idle metropolis; and the most rational part of the laity, and even of the clergy, appear to have been fatisfied of my innocence and accuracy. I would not print this Vindication in quarto, left it fhould be bound and preferved with the hiftory itfelf. At the diftance of twelve years, I calmly affirm my judgment of Davies, Chelfum, &c. A victory over fuch antagonists was a fufficient humiliation. They, however, were rewarded in this world. Poor Chelfum was indeed neglected: and I dare not boaft the making Dr. Watfon a bifhop ; he is a prelate of a large mind and liberal fpirit ": but I enjoyed the pleafure of giving a Royal penfion to Mr. Davies, and of collating Dr.

M 3

166

Apthorpe to an archiepifcopal living. Their fuccefs encouraged the zeal of Taylor the Arian ", and Milner the Methodift ", with many others, whom it would be difficult to remember, and tedious to rehearfe. The lift of my adverfaries, however, was graced with the more respectable names of Dr. Prieftley, Sir David Dalrymple, and Dr. White . and every polemic, of either university, discharged his fermon or pamphlet against the impenetrable filence of the Roman historian. In his History of the Corruptions of Chriftianity, Dr. Prieftley threw down his two gauntlets to Bifhop Hurd and Mr. Gibbon. I declined the challenge in a letter, exhorting my opponent to enlighten the world by his philosophical difcoveries, and to remember that the merit of his predeceffor Servetus is now reduced to a fingle paffage, which indicates the fmaller circulation of the blood through the lungs, from and to the heart ". Inftead of liftening to this friendly advice, the dauntlefs philosopher of Birmingham continued to fire away his double battery againft those who believed too little, and those who believed too much. From my replies he has nothing to hope or fear : but his Socinian fhield has repeatedly been pierced by the fpear of Horfley, and his trumpet of fedition may at length awaken the magistrates of a free country.

The profession and rank of Sir David Dalrymple (now a Lord of Seffion) has given a more decent color to his flyle. But he forutinized each feparate passage of the two chapters with the dry minuteness of a special pleader; and as he was always folicitous to make, he may have fucceeded fometimes in finding, a flaw. In his Annals of Scotland, he has fhown himfelf a diligent collector and an accurate critic.

I have praifed, and I ftill praife, the eloquent fermons which were preached in St. Mary's pulpit at Oxford by Dr. White. If he affaulted me with fome degree of illiberal acrimony, in fuch a place, and before fuch an audience, he was obliged to fpeak the language of the country. I fmiled at a paffage in one of his private letters to Mr. Badcock; "The part where we encounter Gibbon muft be "brilliant and ftriking."

In a fermon preached before the univerfity of Cambridge, Dr. Edwards complimented a work, "which can only perifh with the language itfelf;" and effeems the author a formidable enemy. He is, indeed, aftonifhed that more learning and ingenuity has not been fhown in the defence of Ifrael; that the prelates and dignitaries of the church (alas, good man!) did not vie with each other, whofe ftone fhould fink the deepeft in the forehead of this Goliah.

"But the force of truth will oblige us to confefs, that in the attacks which have been levelled againft our fceptical hiftorian, we can difcover but flender traces of profound and exquifite erudition, of folid criticifm and accurate inveftigation; but we are too frequently difgufted by vague and inconclufive reafoning; by unfeafonable banter and fenfelefs witticifms; by imbittered bigotry and enthufiaftic jargon; by futile cavils and illi-M 4

urn:nbn:de:gbv:3:1-700122-p0187-0

168

" beral invectives. Proud and elated by the weak-" nefs of his antagonifts, he condeficends not to " handle the fword of controverfy "."

Let me frankly own that I was flartled at the first difcharge of ecclefiaftical ordnance; but as foon as I found that this empty noife was mifchievous only in the intention, my fear was converted into indignation; and every feeling of indignation or curiofity has long fince fubfided in pure and placid indifference.

The profecution of my hiftory was foon afterwards checked by another controverly of a very different kind. At the requeft of the Lord Chancellor, and of Lord Weymouth, then Secretary of State, I vindicated, against the French manifesto, the justice of the British arms. The whole correspondence of Lord Stormont, our late ambaffador at Paris, was fubmitted to my inspection, and the Mémoire Juftificatif, which I composed in French, was first approved by the Cabinet Ministers, and then delivered as a flate paper to the courts of Europe. The flyle and manner are praifed by Beaumarchais himfelf, who, in his private quarrel, attempted a reply; but he flatters me, by afcribing the memoir to Lord Stormont; and the groffnels of his invective betrays the lofs of temper and of wit; he acknowledged " that le style ne seroit pas fans grace, ni la logique fans justeffe, &c. if the facts were true which he undertakes to disprove. For these facts my credit is not pledged; I fpoke as a lawyer from my brief, but the veracity of Beaumarchais may be eftimated from the affertion that France, by the treaty of Paris (1763), was limited to a certain number of thips of war. On the application of the Duke of Choifeul, he was obliged to retract this daring fallhood.

Among the honorable connexions which I had formed, I may justly be proud of the friendship of Mr. Wedderburne, at that time Attorney General, who now illustrates the title of Lord Loughborough, and the office of Chief Justice of the Common Pleas. By his ftrong recommendation, and the favorable difpolition of Lord North, I was appointed one of the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations; and my private income was enlarged by a clear addition of between feven and eight hundred pounds a year. The fancy of a hoftile orator may paint, in the ftrong colors of ridicule, " the perpetual virtual adjournment, and the un-" broken fitting vacation of the Board of Trade "." But it must be allowed that our duty was not intolerably fevere, and that I enjoyed many days and weeks of repose, without being called away from my library to the office. My acceptance of a place provoked fome of the leaders of oppolition, with whom I had lived in habits of intimacy, and I was most unjustly accused of deferting a party, in which I had never inlifted ".

The afpect of the next feffion of parliament was flormy and perilous; country meetings, petitions, and committees of correfpondence, announced the public difcontent; and inftead of voting with a triumphant majority, the friends of government were often exposed to a ftruggle, and fometimes to a defeat. The House of Commons adopted Mr. Dunning's motion, "That the influence of the

urn:nbn:de:gbv:3:1-700122-p0189-5

" Crown had increased, was increasing, and ought " to be diminished :" and Mr. Burke's bill of reform was framed with fkill, introduced with eloquence, and fupported by numbers. Our late prefident, the American Secretary of State, very narrowly escaped the fentence of profcription; but the unfortunate Board of Trade was abolifhed in the committee by a fmall majority (207 to 100) of eight votes. The ftorm, however, blew over for a time; a large defection of country gentlemen eluded the fanguine hopes of the patriots: the Lords of Trade were revived ; administration recovered their ftrength and fpirit; and the flames of London, which were kindled by a milchievous madman, admonished all thinking men of the danger of an appeal to the people. In the premature diffolution which followed this feffion of parliament I loft my feat Mr. Elliot was now deeply engaged in the measures of opposition, and the electors of Lefkeard " are commonly of the fame opinion as Mr. Elliot.

In this interval of my fenatorial life, I publifhed the fecond and third volumes of the Decline and Fall. My ecclefiaftical hiftory ftill breathed the fame fpirit of freedom; but proteftant zeal is more indifferent to the characters and controverfies of the fourth and fifth centuries. My obfinate filence had damped the ardor of the polemics. Dr. Watfon, the moft candid of my adverfaries, affured me that he had no thoughts of renewing the attack, and my impartial balance of the virtues and vices of Julian was generally praifed. This truce was interrupted only by fome animadverfions of the Catholics of Italy, and by fome angry letters from Mr. Travis, who made me perfonally refponfible for condemning, with the beft critics, the fpurious text of the three heavenly witheffes.

The piety or prudence of my Italian translator has provided an antidote against the poifon of his original. The 5th and 7th volumes are armed with five letters from an anonymous divine to his friends, Foothead and Kirk, two English students at Rome; and this meritorious fervice is commended by Monfignor Stonor, a prelate of the fame nation, who discovers much venom in the fluid and nervous style of Gibbon. The critical effay at the end of the third volume was furnissed by the Abbate Nicola Spedahieri, whose zeal has gradually swelled to a more folid confutation in two quarto volumes. — Shall I be excused for not having read them?

The brutal infolence of Mr. Travis's challenge can only be excufed by the abfence of learning, judgement, and humanity; and to that excufe he has the faireft or fouleft pretention. Compared with Archdeacon Travis, Chelfum and Davies affume the title of refpectable enemies.

The bigotted advocate of popes and monks may be turned over even to the bigots of Oxford; and the wretched Travis ftill fmarts under the laft of the mercilefs Porfon. I confider Mr. Porfon's anfwer to Archdeacon Travis as the moft acute and accurate piece of criticifm which has appeared fince the days of Bentley. His ftrictures are founded in argument, enriched with learning, and enlivened with wit; and his adverfary neither deferves nor finds any quarter at his hands. The evidence of the three heavenly witneffes would now be rejected in any court of juftice: but prejudice is blind, authority is deaf, and our vulgar bibles will ever be polluted by this fpurious text, "fedet aternumque fedebit." The more learned ecclefiaftics will indeed have the fecret fatiffaction of reprobating in the clofet what they read in the church.

172

I perceived, and without furprife, the coldnefs and even prejudice of the town; nor could a whifper escape my ear, that, in the judgment of many readers my continuation was much inferior to the original attempts. An author who cannot afcend will always appear to fink : envy was now prepared for my reception, and the zeal of my religious, was fortified by the motive of my political, enemies. Bifhop Newton, in writing his own life, was at full liberty to declare how much he himfelf and two eminent brethern were difgusted by Mr. G.'s prolixity, tediousnels, and affectation. But the old man should not have indulged his zeal in a falfe and feeble charge against the historian ", who had faithfully and even cautioufly rendered Dr. Burnet's meaning by the alternative of fleep or repofe. That philosophic divine fuppofes, that, in the period between death and the refurrection, human fouls exift without a body, endowed with internal confcioufnefs, but destitute of all active or passive connexion with the external world. "Secundum communem dictionem " facræ scripturæ, mors dicitur fomnus, & morientes " dicuntur obdormire, quod innuere mihi videtur " ftatum mortis effe statum quietis, filentii, & " depraseas." (De Statu Mortuorum, ch. v. p. 98.)

I was however encouraged by fome domeftic and foreign tellimonies of applaufe; and the fecond and third volumes infenfibly role in fale and reputation to a level with the firft. But the public is feldom wrong; and I am inclined to believe that, efpecially in the beginning, they are more prolix and lefs entertaining than the firft: my efforts had not been relaxed by fuccefs, and I had rather deviated into the oppofite fault of minute and fuperfluous diligence. On the Continent, my name and writings were flowly diffufed : a French translation of the firft volume had difappointed the bookfellers of Paris; and a paffage in the third was confirued as a perfonal reflection on the reigning monarch ⁶⁴.

Before I could apply for a feat at the general election the lift was already full; but Lord North's promife was fincere, his recommendation was effectual. and I was foon chofen on a vacancy for the borough of Lymington, in Hampshire. In the first session of the new parliament, administration stood their ground; their final overthrow was referved for the fecond. The American war had once been the favorite of the country : the pride of England was irritated by the refiftance of her colonies, and the executive power was driven by national clamor into the most vigorous and coercive measures. But the length of a fruitlefs conteft, the lofs of armies, the accumulation of debt and taxes, and the hoffile confederacy of France, Spain, and Holland, indifpofed the public to the American war, and the perfons by whom it was conducted; the reprefentatives of the people, followed, at a flow diftance, the changes of their opinion; and the minifters who refufed to bend, were broken by the tempeft. As foon as Lord North had loft, or was about to lofe, a majority in the Houfe of Commons, he furrendered his office, and retired to a private flation, with the tranquil affurance of a clear conficience and a cheerful temper: the old fabric was diffolved, and the pofts of government were occupied by the victorious and veteran troops of oppolition. The lords of trade were not immediately difmiffed, but the board itfelf was abolifhed by Mr. Burke's bill, which decency had compelled the patriots to revive; and I was ftripped of a convenient falary, after having enjoyed it about three years.

So flexible is the title of my Hiftory, that the final era might be fixed at my own choice; and I long hefitated whether I fhould be content with the three volumes, the fall of the Weftern empire, which fulfilled my first engagement with the public. In this interval of fuspense, nearly a twelvemonth, I returned by a natural impulse to the Greek authors of antiquity; I read with new pleafure the Iliad and the Odyffey, the Hiftories of Herodotus, Thucydides, and Xenophon, a large portion of the tragic and comic theatre of Athens, and many interefting dialogues of the Socratic Ichool. Yet in the luxury of freedom I began to will for the daily talk, the active purfuit, which gave a value to every book, and an object to every inquiry : the preface of a new edition announced my defign, and I dropped without reluctance from the age of Plato to that of Juftinian. The original texts of Procopius and Agathias fupplied the events and even the characters of his reign: but a laborious winter was devoted to the Codes, the Pandects, and the modern interpreters, before I prefumed to form an abftract of the civil law. My fkill was improved by practice, my diligence perhaps was quickened by the lofs of office; and, excepting the laft chapter, I had finished the fourth volume before I fought a retreat on the banks of the Leman Lake.

It is not the purpose of this narrative to expatiate on the public or fecret hiftory of the times : the fchifm which followed the death of the Marguis of Rockingham, the appointment of the Earl of Shelburne. the refignation of Mr. Fox, and his famous coalition with Lord North. But I may affert, with fome degree of affurance, that in their political conflict those great antagonists had never felt any personal animofity to each other, that their reconciliation was eafy and fincere, and that their friendship bas never been clouded by the fhadow of fulpicion or jealoufy. The most violent or venal of their respective followers embraced this fair occasion of revolt, but their alliance still commanded a majority in the House of Commons; the peace was cenfured, Lord Shelburne refigned, and the two friends knelt on the fame cushion to take the oath of fecretary of state. From a principle of gratitude I adhered to the coalition : my vote was counted in the day of battle, but I was overlooked in the division of the spoil. There were many claimants more deferving and importunate than myfelf: the board of trade could not be reftored; and, while the lift of places was curtailed, the number of candidates was doubled. An eafy difmillion to a fecure feat at the board of cuftoms or excile was promifed on the first vacancy : but the chance was defaut and doubtful; nor could I folicit with nuch at dor an ignoble fervitude, which would have robbed me of the most valuable of my fludious hours: at the fame time the tumult of London, and the attendance on parliament, were grown more irkfome; and, without fome additional income, I could not long or prudently maintain the flyle of expense to which I was accustomed.

From my early acquaintance with Laufanne I had always cherifhed a fecret wifh, that the febool of my youth might become the retreat of my declining age. A moderate fortune would fecure the bleffings of eafe, leifure, and independence : the country, the people the manners, the language, were congenial to my tafte; and I might indulge the hope of paffing fome years in the domeftic fociety of a friend. After travelling with feveral English ", Mr. Deyverdun was now fettled at home, in a pleafant habitation. the gift of his deceased aunt : we had long been feparated, we had long been filent; yet in my first letter I exposed, with the most perfect confidence, my fituation, my fentiments, and my defigns. His immediate anfwer was a warm and joyful acceptance: the picture of our future life provoked my impatience; and the terms of arrangement were fhort and fimple, as he poffeffed the property, and I undertook the expense of our common house ". Before I could break my English chain, it was incumbent on me to ftruggle with the feelings of my heart, the indolence indolence of my temper, and the opinion of the world. which unanimoufly condemned this voluntary banifhment. In the disposal of my effects, the library, a facred deposit, was alone excepted : as my postchaife moved over Westminster-bridge I bid a long farewel to the "fumum & opes ftrepitumq; Romæ." My journey by the direct road through France was not attended with any accident, and I arrived at Laufanne nearly twenty years after my fecond departure. Within lefs than three months the coalition ftruck on some hidden rocks : had I remained on board, I fhould have perifhed in the general fhipwreck ".

Since my establishment at Laufanne, more that feven years have elapfed; and if every day has not been equally foft and ferene, not a day, not a moment. has occurred in which I have repented of my choice. During my absence, a long portion of human life . many changes had happened : my elder acquaintance had left the ftage; virgins were ripened into matrons. and children were grown to the age of manhood. But the fame manners were transmitted from one generation to another : my friend alone was an ineltimable treafure; my name was not totally forgotten. and all were ambitious to welcome the arrival of a ftranger and the return of a fellow-citizen. The firft winter was given to a general embrace, without any nice diferimination of perfons and characters. After a more regular fettlement, a more accurate furvey. I difcovered three folid and permanent benefits of my new fituation. 1. My perfonal freedom had been fomewhat impaired by the Houfe of Commons and N the Board of Trade; but I was now delivered from the chain of duty and dependence, from the hopes and fears of political adventure : my fober mind was no longer intoxicated by the fumes of party, and I rejoiced in my escape, as often as I read of the midnight debates which preceded the diffolution of parliament ". 2. My English economy had been that of a folitary bachelor, who might afford fome occafional dinners. In Switzerland I enjoyed at every meal, at every hour, the free and pleafant converfation of the friend of my youth ; and my daily table was always provided for the reception of one or two extraordinary guefts. Our importance in fociety is lefs a positive than a relative weight : in London I was loft in the crowd; I ranked with the first families of Laufanne, and my ftyle of prudent expense enabled me to maintain a fair balance of reciprocal civilities. 3. Inftead of a small house between a ftreet and a ftable-yard, I began to occupy a fpacious and convenient manfion, connected on the north-fide with the city, and open on the fouth to a beautiful and boundlefs horizon. A garden of four acres had been laid out by the tafte of Mr. Deyverdun : from the garden a rich fcenery of meadows and vineyards defcends to the Leman Lake, and the profpect far beyond the Lake is crowned by the flupendous mountains of Savoy. My books and my acquaintance had been first united in London ; but this happy pofition of my library in town and country was finally referved for Laufanne. Poffeffed of every comfort in this triple alliance, I could not be tempted to change my habitation with the changes of the feafons.

VOL. I.

178

170

My friends had been kindly apprehensive that I fould not be able to exift in a Swifs town at the foot of the Alps, after having fo long converfed with the first men of the first cities of the world. Such lofty connexions may attract the curious, and gratifiy the vain; but I am too modelt, or too proud, to rate my own value by that of my affociates ; and whatfoever may be the fame of learning or genius, experience has flown me that the cheaper qualifications of politeness and good fenfe are of more uleful currency in the commerce of life. By many, conversation is effeemed as a theatre or a school : but, after the morning has been occupied by the labors of the library, I with to unbend rather than to exercise my mind ; and in the interval between tea and fupper I am far from difdawing the innocent amusement of a game at cards. Laufanne is peopled by a numerous gentry, whofe companionable idlenefs is feldom difturbed by the purfuits of avarice or ambition : the women, though confined to a domeflic education, are endowed for the most part with more taste and knowledge than their hulbands and brothers : but the decent freedoin of both fexes is equally remote from the ex. tremes of fimplicity and refinement. I fhall add as a misfortune rather than a merit, that the fituation and beauty of the Pays de Vaud, the long habits of the English, the medical reputation of Dr. Tiffot, and the fashion of viewing the mountains and Glaciers. have opened us on all fides to the incurfions of foreigners. The vifits of Mr. and Madame Necker, of Prince Henry of Pruffia, and of Mr. Fox, may form N 2 fome pleafing exceptions; but, in general, Laufanne has appeared most agreeable in my eyes, when we have been abandoned to our own fociety. I had frequently feen Mr. Necker, in the fummer of 1784, at a country house near Lausanne, where he composed his Treatife on the Administration of the Finances. I have fince, in October 1790, visited him in his present refidence, the castle and barony of Copet, near Geneva. Of the merits and measures of that states may various opinions may be entertained; but all impartial men must agrees in their efteem of his integrity and patriotifm.

180

In the month of August 1784, Prince Henry of Prussia, in his way to Paris, passed three days at Lausanne. His military conduct has been praised by professional men; his character has been vilified by the witand malice of a dæmon "; but I was flattered by his affability, and entertained by his conversation.

In his tour of Switzerland (September 1788) Mr. Fox gave me two'days of free and private fociety". He feemed to feel, and even to envy, the happinefs of my fituation; while I admired the powers of a fuperior man, as they are blended in his attractive character with the foftnefs and fimplicity of a child. Perhaps no human being was ever more perfectly exempt from the taint of malevolence, vanity, or falhood.

My transmigration from London to Laufanne could not be effected without interrupting the course of my historical labors. The hurry of my departure, the joy of my arrival, the delay of my tools, fuspended their progress; and a full twelvemonth was loft before I could refume the thread of regular and daily industry. A number of books most requifite and leaft common had been previoufly felected; the academical library of Laufanne, which I could use as my own, contained at least the fathers and councils; and I have derived fome occafional fuccour from the public collections of Berne and Geneva. The fourth volume was foon terminated, by an abstract of the controversies of the Incarnation, which the learned Dr. Prideaux was apprehenfive of exposing to profane eyes. It had been the original defign of the learned Dean Prideaux to write the hiftory of the ruin of the Eaftern Church. In this work it would have been neceffary, not only to unravel all those controversies which the Chriftians made about the hypoftatical union, but alfo to unfold all the niceties and fubtle notions which each fect entertained concerning it. The pious hiftorian was apprehenfive of expoling that incomprehenfible mystery to the cavils and objections of unbelievers; and he durft not, "feeing " the nature of this book, venture it abroad in fo " wanton and lewd an age "."

In the fifth and fixth volumes the revolutions of the empire and the world are moft rapid, various, and inftructive; and the Greek or Roman hiftorians are checked by the hoftile narratives of the barbarians of the Eaft and the Weft⁷².

It was not till after many defigns, and many trials, that I preferred, as I fill prefer, the method of grouping my picture by nations; and the feeming neglect of chronological order is furely compenfated by the fuperior merits of interest and perspicuity. The ftyle of the first volume is, in my opinion, fomewhat crude and elaborate; in the fecond and third it is ripened into eafe, correctnefs, and pumbers; but in the three laft I may have been feduced by the facility of my pen, and the conftant habit of speaking one language and writing another may have infuled fome mixture of Gallic idioms. Happily for my eyes, I have always closed my ftudies with the day, and commonly with the morning; and a long, but temperate, labor has been accomplifted, without fatiguing either the mind or body: but when I computed the remainder of my time and my talk, it was apparent that, according to the feafon of publication, the delay of a month would be productive of that of a year. I was now ftraining for the goal, and in the laft winter many evenings were borrowed from the focial pleafures of Laufanne. I could now with that a paufe, an interval, had been allowed for a ferious revifal.

N 3

182

I have prefumed to mark the moment of conception: I shall now commemorate the hour of my final deliverance. It was on the day, or rather night, of the 27th of June 1787, between the hours of eleven and twelve, that I wrote the last lines of the last page, in a summer-house in my garden. After laying down my pen, I took feveral turns in a berceau, or covered walk of acacias, which commands a prospect of the country, the lake, and the mountains. The air was temperate, the sky was series, the filver orb of the moon was reflected from the waters, and all nature was filent. I will not diffemble the first emotions of joy on the recovery of my freedom, and, perhaps, the eftablishment of my fame. But my pride was foon humbled, and a fober melancholy was fpread over my mind, by the idea that I had taken an everlafting leave of an old and agreeable companion, and that whatfoever might be the future date of my Hiftory, the life of the historian must be short and precarious. I will add two facts, which have feldom occurred in the composition of fix, or at least of five, quartos. 1. My first rough manufcript, without any intermediate copy, has been fent to the prefs. 2. Not a fheet has been feen by any human eyes, excepting those of the author and the printer : the faults and the merits are exclusively my own 71.

I cannot help recollecting a much more extraordinary fact, which is affirmed of himfelf by Retif de la Bretonne, a voluminous and original writer of French novels. He labored, and may ftill labor, in the humble office of corrector to a printing houfe; but this office enabled him to transport an entire volume from his mind to the prefs; and his work was given to the public without ever having been written with a pen.

After a quiet refidence of four years, during which I had never moved ten miles from Laufanne, it was not without fome reluctance and terror that I undertook, in a journey of two hundred leagues, to crofs the mountains and the fea. Yet this formidable adventure was achieved without danger or fatigue; and at the end of a fortnight I found myfelf in Lord Sheffield's houfe and library, fafe, happy, and at home. The character of my friend (Mr. Holroyd) had recommended him to a feat in parliament for Coventry, the command of a regiment of light dragoons, and an Irifh peerage. The fenfe and fpirit of his political writings have decided the public opinion on the great queftions of our commercial intereft with America and Ireland'⁴.

N4

184

The fale of his Obfervations on the American States was diffusive, their effect beneficial: the Navigation Act, the palladium of Britain, was defended. and perhaps faved, by his pen; and he proves, by the weight of fact and argument, that the mothercountry may furvive and flourish after the loss of America. My friend has never cultivated the arts of composition; but his materials are copious and correct, and he leaves on his paper the clear impreffion of an active and vigorous mind. His "Ob-" fervations on the Trade, Manufactures, and pre-" fent State of Ireland, " were intended to guide the industry, to correct the prejudices, and to affuage the paffions of a country which feemed to forget that the could be free and profperous only by a friendly connexion with Great Britain. The concluding obfervations are written with fo much cafe and fpirit, that they may be read by those who are the leaft interested in the subject.

He fell (in 1784) with the unpopular coalition; but his merit has been acknowledged at the laft general election, 1790, by the honorable invitation and free choice of the city of Briftol. During the whole time of my refidence in England I was entertained at Sheffield Place and in Downing-Street by his hofpitable kindnefs; and the most pleafant period was that which I paffed in the domeftic fociety of the family. In the larger circle of the metropolis I obferved the country and the inhabitants with the knowledge, and without the prejudices, of an Englifhman; but I rejoiced in the apparent increase of wealth and profperity, which might he fairly divided between the fpirit of the nation and the wildom of the minister. All party - resentment was now loft in oblivion: fince I was no man's rival, no man was my enemy. I felt the dignity of independence, and as I alked no more, I was fatisfied with the general civilities of the world. The house in London which I frequented with most pleafure and affiduity was that of Lord North. After the lofs of power and of fight, he was still happy in himself and his friends; and my public tribute of gratitude and efteem could no longer be fuspected of any interested motive. Before my departure from England, I was prefent at the august spectacle of Mr. Haftings's trial in Weftminfter Hall. It is not my province to abfolve or condemn the Governor of India; but Mr. Sheridan's eloquence demanded my applause; nor could I hear without emotion the perfonal compliment which he paid me in the prefence of the British nation".

From this difplay of genins, which blazed four fucceffive days, I fhall ftoop to a very mechanical circumftance. As I was waiting in the managers' box, I had the curiofity to inquire of the fhort-hand writer, how many words a ready and rapid orator might pronounce in an hour? From 7000 to 7500 was his anfwer. The medium of 7200 will afford 120 words in a minute, and two words in each fecond. But this computation will only apply to the English language.

186

As the publication of my three laft volumes was the principal object, fo it was the first care of my English journey. The previous arrangements with the bookfeller and the printer were fettled in my paffage through London, and the proofs, which I returned more correct, were transmitted every poft from the prefs to Sheffield-Place. The length of the operation, and the leifure of the country, allowed fome time to review my manufcript. Several rare and ufeful books, the Affifes de Jerufalem, Ramufius de Bello C. Paro, the Greek Acts of the Synod of Florence, the Statuta Urbis Romæ, &c. were procured, and introduced in their proper places the fupplements which they afforded. The impreffion of the fourth volume had confumed three months. Our common interest required that we should move with a quicker pace; and Mr. Strahan, fulfilled his engagement, which few printers could fuftain, of delivering every week three thousand copies of nine fheets. The day of publication was, however, delayed, that it might coincide with the fifty-first anniverfary of my own birth-day; the double feftival was celebrated by a cheerful literary dinner at Mr. Cadell's houfe ; and I feemed to blufh while they read an 'elegant compliment from Mr. Hayley", whofe poetical talents had more than once been employed in the praife of his friend. Before Mr. Hayley inferibed with my name his epiftles on hiftory, I was not acquainted with that amiable man and elegant poet. He afterwards thanked me in verse for my fecond and third volumes"; and in the fummer of 1781. the Roman Eagle " (a proud title) accepted the invitation of the English Sparrow, who chirped in the groves of Hartham, near Chichefter. As moft of the former purchafers were naturally defirous of completing their fets, the fale of the quarto edition was quick and eafy ; and an octavo fize was printed. to fatisfy at a cheaper rate the public demand. The conclusion of my work was generally read, and varioufly judged. The ftyle has been exposed to much academical criticism; a religious clamor was revived. and the reproach of indecency has been loudly echoed by the rigid cenfors of morals. I never could understand the clamor that has been raifed against the indecency of my three laft volumes. 1. An equal degree of freedom in the former part, efpecially in the first volume, had paffed without reproach. 2. I am juffihed in painting the manners of the times; the vices of Theodora form an effential feature in the reign and character of Juftinian. 3. My English text is chafte, and all licentious paffages are left in the obscurity of a learned language. Le Latin dans fes mots brave l'honnêteté, fays the correct Boileau, in a country and idiom more ferupulous than our own. Yet, upon the whole, the Hiftory of the Decline and Fall feems to have ftruck root, both at home and abroad, and may, perhaps, a hundred years hence ftill continue to be abufed. I am lefs flattered by Mr. Porfon's high encomium on the ftyle and spirit of my history, than I am fatisfied with his honorable toftimony to my attention, diligence, and accuracy ; those humble virtues, which religious zeal had most audaciously denied. The fweetnefs of his praife is tempered by a reafonable mixture of acid. " As the book may not be common in England, I shall transcribe my own character from the Bibliotheca Historica of Meufelius", a learned and laborious German. "Summis ævi noftri " hiftoricis Gibbonus fine dubio adnumerandus eft. " Inter capitolii ruinas stans primum hujus operis " fcribendi confilium cepit. Florentiffimos vitæ " annos colligendo & laborando eidem impendit. " Enatum inde monumentum ære perennius, licet " paffim appareant finistre dicta, minus perfecta, " veritati non fatis confentanea. Videmus quidem " ubique fere studium scrutandi veritatemque scri-" bendi maximum: tamen fine Tillemontio duce " ubi scilicet hujus historia finitur fæpius poster ti-" tubat atque hallucinatur. Quod vel maxime fit, " ubi de rebus Ecclesiafticis vel de juris prudentià " Romanâ (tom. iv.) tradit, & in aliis locis. Attamen " nævi hujus generis haud impediunt quo minus " operis fummam & oixovoniav præclare dispositam. " delectum rerum fapientiffimum, argutum quoque " interdum, dictionemque feu stylum historico æque " ac philosopho digniffimum, & vix a quoque alio " Anglo, Humio ac Robertfono haud exceptis (pra-" replum?) vehementer laudemus, atque fæculo nof-" tro de hujulmodi historià gratulemur Gib-" bonus adverfarios cum in tum extra patriam nactus " eft, quia propogationem religionis Christianæ, " non, ut vulgo, fieri folet, aut more Theologorum, " fed ut Historicum & Philosophum decet, expo-" fuerat. "

187

The French Italian, and German translations have been executed with various fuccefs; but, inflead of patronizing, I fhould willingly fupprefs fuch imperfect copies, which injure the character, while they propagate the name of the author. The first volume had been feebly, though faithfully, tanflated into French by M. Le Clerc de Septchenes, a young gentleman of a studious character and liberal fortune. After his decease the work was continued by two manufacturers of Paris, M. M. Defmuniers and Cantwell: but the former is now an active member in the national affembly, and the undertaking languifhes in the hands of his affociate. The fuperior merit of the interpreter, or his language, inclines me to prefer the Italian verfion: but I with that it were in my power to read the German, which is praifed by the best judges. The Irish pirates are at once my friends and my enemies. But I cannot be displeafed with the two numerous and correct impreffions which have been published for the use of the continent at Bafil im Switzerland ". The conquests of our language and literature are not confined to Europe alone, and a writer who fuceeds in London, is fpeedily read on the banks of the Delaware and the Ganges.

In the preface of the fourth volume, while I gloried in the name of an Englifhman, I announced my approaching return to the neighbourhood of the Lake of Laufanne. This laft trial confirmed my affurance that I had wifely chofen for my own happinefs; nor did I once, in a year's vifit, entertain a wifth of fettling in my native country. Britain is the free and fortunate Ifland; but where is the fpot in which I could unite the comforts and beauties of my eftablifhment at Laufanne? The tumult of London aftonifhed my eyes and ears; the amufements of public places were no longer adequate to the trouble; the clubs and affem. blies were filled with new faces and young men ; and our beft fociety, our long and late dinners, would foon have been prejudicial to my health. Without any fhare in the political wheel, I must be idle and infignificant: yet the most splendid temptations would not have enticed me to engage a fecond time in the fervitude of parliament or office. At Tunbridge, fome weeks after the publication of my Hiftory, I reluctantly guitted Lord and Lady Sheffield, and, with a young Swifs friend ", whom I had introduced to the English world, I purfued the road of Dover and Laufanne. My habitation was embellished in my abfence, and the laft division of books, which followed my steps, increased my chosen library to the number of between fix and feven thousand volumes. Mv feraglio was ample, my choice was free, my appetite was keen. After a full repart on Homer and Ariftophanes, I involved myfelf in the philosophic maze of the writings of Plato, of which the dramatic is, perhaps, more interefting than the argumentative part : but I ftepped afide into every path of inquiry which reading or reflection accidentally opened.

100

Alas! the joy of my return, and my fudious ardour, were foon damped by the melancholy flate of my friend IM.Deyverdun. His health and fpirits had long fuffered a gradual decline, a fucceffion of a poplectic fits announced his diffolution; and before he expired, thofe who love him could not with for the continuance of his life. The voice of reafon might congratulate his deliverance, but the feelings of nature and friend thip could be fubdued only by time : his amiable character was ftill a live in my remembrance; each room, each walk, was imprinted with our common footfteps ; and I fhould blufh at my own philosophy, if a long interval of fludy had not preceded and followed the death of my friend. By his last will he left to me the option of purchasing his house and garden, or of possessing them during my life, on the payment either of a Ripulated price, or of an eafy retribution to his kinfman and heir. I fhould probably have been tempted by the dæmon of property, if some legal difficulties had not been ftarted against my title; a contest would have been vexatious, doubtful, and invidious; and the heir most gratefully subscribed an agreement, which rendered my life-poffeffion more perfect, and his future condition more advantageous. Yet I had often revolved the judicious lines in which Pope answers the objections of his long-fighted friend:

Pity to build without or child or wife; Why, you'll enjoy it only all your life: Well, if the use be mine, does it concern one

Whether the name belong to Pope or Vernon ? The certainty of my tenure has allowed me to lay out a confiderable fum in improvements and alterations: they have been executed with fkill and tafte; and few men of letters, perhaps, in Europe, are fo defirably lodged as myfelf. But I feel, and with the decline of years I fhall more painfully feel, that I am alone in paradife. Among the circle of my acquaintance at Laufanne, I have gradually acquired the folid and tender friendfhip of a refpectable fa. mily ": the four perfons of whom it is compofed are all endowed with the virtues beft adapted to their age and fituation; and I am encouraged to love the parents as a brother, and the children as a father. Every day we feek and find the opportunities of meeting; yet even this valuable connexion cannot fupply the lofs of domeftic fociety.

Within the laft two or three years our tranquillity has been clouded by the diforders of France: many families at Laufanne were alarmed and affected by the terrors of an impending bankruptcy; but the revolution, or rather the diffolution of the kingdom has been heard and felt in the adjacent lands.

I beg leave to fubferibe my affent to Mr. Burke's creed on the revolution of France. I admire his eloquence, I approve his politics, I adore his chivalry, and I can almost excuse his reverence for church establishments. I have fometimes thought of writing a dialogue of the dead, in which Lucian, Erasmus, and Voltaire should mutually acknowledge the danger of exposing an old superstition to the contempt of the blind and fanatic multitude.

A fwarm of emigrants of both fexes, who elcaped from the public ruin, has been attracted by the vicinity, the manners, and the language of Laufanne; and our narrow habitations in town and country are now occupied by the firft names and titles lof the departed monarchy. Thefe noble fugitives are entitled to our pity; they may claim our effeem, but they cannot, in their prefent flate of mind and fortune, much contribute to our amufement. Inftead of looking down as calm and idle fpectators on the theatre of Europe, our domeftic harmony is fomewhat imbittered by the infufion of party fpirit: our ladies and gentlemen affume the character of felftaught politicians; and the fober dictates of wildom and and experience are filenced by the clamor of the triumphant démocrates. The fanatic miffionaries of fedition have scattered the feeds of discontent in our cities and villages, which had flourished above two hundred and fifty years without fearing the approach of war, or feeling the weight of government. Many individuals and fome communities, appear to be infefted with the Gallic phrenzy, the wild theories of equal and boundless freedom; but I truft that the body of the people will be faithful to their fovereign and to themfelves; and I am fatisfied that the failure or fuccels of a revolt would equally terminate in the ruin of the country. While the ariftocracy of Berne protects the happinefs, it is fuperfluous to inquire whether it be founded in the rights, of man: the economy of the flate is liberally supplied without the aid of taxes; and the magiftrates mull reign with prudence and equity, fince they are unarmed in the midft of an armed nation.

The revenue of Berne, excepting fome fmall duties. is derived from church lands, tithes, feudal rights, and intereft of money. The republic has nearly 500,000l. fterling in the English funds, and the amount of their treasure is unknown to the citizens themfelves. For myfelf (may the omen be averted) I can only declare, that the first stroke of a rebel drum would be the fignal of my immediate departure.

When I contemplate the common lot of mortality, I muft acknowledge that I have drawn a high prize in the lottery of life. The far greater part of the globe is overfpread with barbarifm or flavery: in the civilized world, the moft numerous clafs is condemned to ignorance and poverty; and the double fortune of my birth in a free and enlightened country, in an honorable and wealthy family, is the lucky chance of an unit against millions. The general probability is about three to one, that a new-born infant will not live to complete his fiftieth year ^{3*}. have now passed that age, and may fairly estimate the prefent value of my existence in the threefold division of mind, body, and estate.

VOL. I.

0

194

1. The first and indispensable requisite of happiness is a clear conficience, unfullied by the reproach or remembrance of an unworthy action.

— Hic murus aheneus efto, Nil confeire fibi, nullà pallescere culpà.

I am endowed with a cheerful temper, a moderate fenfibility, and a natural difpolition to repole rather than to activity : fome mifchievous appetites and habits have perhaps been corrected by philosophy or time. The love of fludy, a paffion which derives fresh vigor from enjoyment, fupplies each day, each hour, with a perpetual fource of independent and rational pleafure; and I am not fenfible of any decay of the mental faculties. The original foil has been highly improved by cultivation; but it may be queftioned, whether fome flowers of fancy, fome grafutel errors, have not been eradicated with the weeds of prejudice. 2. Since I have efcaped from the long perils of my childhood, the ferious advice of a phyfician has feldom been requifite. " The mad-" nefs of fuperfluous health" I have never known; but my tender conftitution has been fortified by time, and the ineftimable gift of the found and peaceful flumbers of infancy may be imputed both to the mind and body. 3. I have already deforibed the merits of my fociety and fituation; but thefe enjoyments would be taftelefs or bitter if their poffeffion were not affured by an annual and adequate fupply. According to the fcale of Switzerland, I am a rich man; and I am indeed rich, fince my income is fuperior to my expense, and my expense is equal to my wiftes. My friend Lord Sheffield has kindly relieved me from the cares to which my tafte and temper are most adverse: shall I add, that fince the failure of my first wiftes, I have never entertained any ferious thoughts of a matrimonial connexion?

195

I am difgusted with the affectation of men of letters. who complain that they have renounced a substance for a fhadow; and that their fame (which fometimes is no infupportable weight) affords a poor compenfation for envy, cenfure, and perfecution ". My own experience, at least, has taught me a very different leffon: twenty happy years have been animated by the labor of my Hiftory; and its funefs has given me a nome a rank, a character, in the world, to which I fhould not otherwife have been entitled. The freedom of my writings has indeed provoked an implacable tribe; but, as I was fafe from the flings, I was foon accuftomed to the buzzing of the hornets: my nerves are not tremblingly alive, and my literary temper is fo happily framed, that I am lefs fenfible of pain than of pleasure. The rational pride of an author may be offended, rather than flattered, by vague indifcriminate praife ; but he cannot, he fhould not, be indifferent to the fair testimonies of private and public efteem. Even his moral fympathy may be gratified by the idea, that now, in the prefent hour, he is imparting fome degree of amufement or knowledge to his friends in a diftant land: that one day his mind will be familiar to the grandchildren of thofe who are yet unborn^{}. I cannot boaft of the friendſhip or favor of princes; the patronage of Engliſh literature has long fince been devolved on our bookfellers, and the meaſure of their liberality is the leaſt ambiguous teſt of our common fucceſs. Perhaps the golden mediocrity of my fortune has contributed to fortify my application.

02

MEMOIRS, &c.

196

The prefent is a fleeting moment, the paft is no more: and our prospect of futurity is dark and doubtful. This day may poffibly be my laft : but the laws of probability, fo true in general, fo fallacious in particular, ftill allow about fifteen years ". I fhall foon enter into the period which, as the most agreeable of his long life, was felected by the judgment and experience of the fage Fontenelle His choice is approved by the eloquent historian of nature, who fixes our moral happinels to the mature feafon in which our paffions are fuppofed to be calmed, our duties fulfilled, our ambition fatisfied, our fame and fortune established on a folid bafis ". In private converfation, that great and amiable man added the weight of his own experience; and this autumnal felicity might be exemplified in the lives of Voltaire, Hume, and many other men of letters. I am far more inclined to embrace than to dispute this comfortable doctrine. I will not suppose any premature decay of the mind or body ; but I muft reluctantly observe that two causes, the abbreviation of time, and the failure of hope, will always tinge with a browner fhade the evening of life.

WHEN I first undertook to prepare Mr. Gibbon's Memoirs for the prefs, I fuppofed that it would be neceffary to introduce fome continuation of them, from the time when they ceafe, namely, foon after his return to Switzerland in the year 1788; but the examination of his correspondence with me fuggested, that the best continuation would be the publication of his letters from that time to his death. I shall thus give more fatisfaction, by employing the language of Mr. Gibbon, inftead of my own; and the public will fee him in a new and (I think) an admirable light, as a writer of letters. By the infertion of a few occasional fentences, I shall obviate the difadvantages that are apt to arife from an interrupted narration. A prejudiced or a fastidious critic may condemn, perhaps, some parts of the letters as trivial; but many readers, I flatter myfelf, will be gratified by difcovering even in thefe my friend's affectionate feelings, and his character in familiar life. His letters in general bear a ftrong refemblance to the ftyle and turn of his conversation ; the characteristics of which were vivacity, elegance, and precifion, with knowledge aftonifhingly extenfive and correct. He never ceased to be instructive and entertaining; and in general there was a vein of pleafantry in his converfation which prevented its becoming languid, even during a refidence of many months with a family in the country.

(197)

It has been fuppofed that he always arranged what he intended to fay, before he fpoke; his quicknefs

03

(198)

in converfation contradicts this notion: but it is very true, that before he fat down to write a note or letter, he completely arranged in his mind what he meant to exprefs. He purfued the fame method in refpect to other compositions; and he occasionally would walk feveral times about his apartment before he had rounded a period to his tafte. He has pleafantly remarked to me, that it fometimes cost him many a turn before he could throw a fentiment into a form that gratified his own criticism. His fystematic habit of arrangement in point of ftyle, affisted, in his inftance, by an excellent memory and correct judgement, is much to be recommended to those who aspire to any perfection in writing.

Although the Memoirs extend beyond the time of Mr. Gibbon's return to Laufanne, I fhall infert a few Letters, written immediately after his arrival there and combine them fo far as to include even the laft note which he wrote a few days previoufly to his death. Some of them contain few incidents; but they connect and carry on the account either of his opinions or of his employment.

(199)

LETTERS

FROM

EDWARD GIBBON Efq.

TO THE

Right Hon. LORD SHEFFIELD.

LAUSANNE, July 30, 1788 .- Wednefday, 3 o'clock.

I HAVE but a moment to fay, before the departure of the post, that after a very pleafant journey I arrived here about half an hour ago; that I am as well arranged, as if I had never ftirred from this place; and that dinner on the table is just announced. Severy I dropt at his country-houfe about two leagues off. I just faluted the family, who dine with me the day after to morrow, and return to town for fome days, I hope weeks, on my account. The fon is an amiable and grateful youth; and even this journey has taught me to know and to love him ftill better. My fatisfaction would be complete, had I not found a fad and ferious alteration in poor Devverdum; but thus our joys are chequered! I embrace all; and at this moment feel the laft pang of our parting at Tunbridge. Convey this letter or information, without delay, from Sheffield-Place to Bath. In a few days I shall write more amply to both places.

04

October 1, 1788.

AFTFR fuch an act of vigor as my first letter, tomposed, finished, and dispatched within half an hour after my landing, while the dinner was smoaking on the table, your knowledge of the animal must have taught you to expect a proportionable degree of relaxation; and you will be fatisfied to hear, that, for many Wednesdays and Saturdays, I have confumed more time than would have sufficed for the epistle, in devising reasons for procrassing it to the next post. At this very moment I begin fo very late, as I am just going to drefs, and dine in the country, that I can take only the benefit of the date, October the first, and must be content to feal and fend my letter next Saturday.

October the 4th.

SATURDAY is now arrived, and I much doubt whether I thall have time to finith. I rofe, as ufual, about feven; but as I knew I thould have fo much time, you know it would have been ridiculous to begin any thing before breakfaft. When I returned from my breakfaft room to the library, unluckily I found on the table fome new and interefting books, which inftantly caught my attention; and without injuring my correspondent, I could fafely beftow a finglehour to gratify my curiofity. Some things which I found in them infentibly led me to other books, and other inquiries; the morning has ftolen away, and I thall be foon fummoned to drefs and dine with the two Severys, father and fon, who are returned from the country on a difagreeable errand, an illness of Madame, from which the is however recovering. Such is the faithful picture of my mind and manners, and from a fingle day difce omnes. After having been fo long chained to the oar, in a splendid galley indeed. I freely and fairly enjoy my liberty as I promifed in my preface; range without control over the wide expanse of my library; converse, as my fancy prompts me, with poets and hiftorians, philosophers and orators, of every age and language; and often indulge my meditations in the invention and arrangement of mighty works, which I shall probably never find time or application to execute. My garden, berceau, and pavilion often varied the fcene of my studies; the beautiful weather which we have enjoyed exhilarated my fpirits, and I again tafted the wildom and happinels of my retirement, till that happiness was interrupted by a very ferious calamity, which took from me for above a fortnight all thoughts of ftudy, of amufement, and even of correspondence. I mentioned in my first letter the uneafinefs I felt at poor Deyverdun's declining health, how much the pleasure of my life was imbittered by the fight of a fuffering and languid friend. The joy of our meeting appeared at first to revive him; and though not fatisfied, I began to think, at least to hope, that he was every day gaining ground; when, alas! one morning I was fuddenly recalled from my berceau to the houfe, with the dreadful intelligence of an apoplectic ftroke; I found him fenfeless : the best affistance was instantly collected; and he had the aid of the genius and experience of Mr. Tiffot, and of the affiduous care of another physician, who for some time scarcely quitted his bedfide either night or day. While I was in momentary dread of a relapfe, with a confession from his phyficians that fuch a relapfe must be fatal, you will feel that I was much more to be pitied than my friend. At length, art or nature triumphed over the enemy of life. I was foon affured that all immediate danger was paft; and now for many days I have had the fatisfaction of feeing him recover. though by flow degrees, his health and ftrength, his fleep and appetite. He now walks about the garden, and receives his particular friends, but has not yet gone abroad. His future health will depend very much upon his own prudence : but, at all'events, this has been a very ferious warning ; and the flighteft indifpolition will hereafter affume a very formidable afpect. But let us turn from this melancholy fubject .- The Man of the people efcaped from the tumult, the bloody tumult of the Westminster election, to the lakes and mountains of Switzerland, and I was informed that he was arrived at the Lion d'Or. I fent a compliment; he answered it in person, and settled at my house for the remainder of the day. I have eat and drank. and converfed and fat up all night with Fox in in England; but it never has happened, perhaps it never can happen again, that I fhould enjoy him as I did that day, alone, from ten in the morning till ten at night. Poor Deyverdun, before his accident, wanted fpirits to appear, and has regretted it fince. Our conversation never flagged a monent; and he feemed thoroughly pleafed with the place and with his company. We had little politics ; though he gave me, in a few words, fuch a character of Pitt, as one great man fhould give of another his rival : much of books, from my own, on which he flattered me very pleafantly, to Homer and the Arabian Nights: much about the country, my garden (which he understands far better than I do), and, upon the whole, I think he envies me, and would do fo were he minister. The next morning I gave him a guide to walk him about the town and country, and invited fome company to meet him at dinner. The following day he continued his journey to Berne and Zurich, and I have heard of him by various means. The people gaze on him as a prodigy. but he flows little inclination to converse with them, &c. &c. &c. Our friend Douglas had been curious, attentive .: agreeable ; and in every place where he has refided fome days, he has left acquaintance who efteem and regret him : I never knew fo clear and general an impreffion.

201

203

After this long letter I have yet many things to fay, though none of any preffing confequence. I hope you are not idle in the deliverance of Beriton, though the late events and edicts in France begin to reconcile me to the pofferfion of dirty acres. What think you of Necker and the States General? Are not the public expectations too fanguine? Adieu. I will write foon to my lady feparately, though I have not any particular fubject for her car. Ever yours.

LAUSANNE, Nov. 29, 1788.

As I have no correspondents but yourfelf, fhould have been reduced to the fale and flupid communications of the newfpapers, if you had not difpatched me an excellent fketch of the extraordinary flate of things. In fo new a cafe the falus populi muft be the firft law; and any extraordinary acts of the two remaining branches of the legiflature muft be excufed by neceffity, and ratified by general confent. * * * * * * * * * * * * * * . Till things are fettled, I expect a regular journal. From kingdoms 1 defcend to farms. * * * *

* * * * * * * * * * * Adieu.

LAUSANNE, Dec. 13, 1788. * * * * * * * Of public affairs I can only hear with curiofity and wonder; carelefs as you may think me, I feel myfelf deeply interefted. You muft now write often; Make Mifs Firth copy any curious fragments; and fir up any of my wellinformed acquaintance, Batt, Douglas, Adam, perhaps Lord Loughborough, to correfpond with me; I will anfwer them.

We are now cold and gay at Laufanne. The Severys came to town yesterday. I faw a good deal of Lords Malmfbury and Beauchamp, and their ladies; Ellis, of the Rolliad, was with them; I like him much: I gave them a dinner.

Adieu for the present. Deyverdun is not worse.

LAUSANNE, April 25, 1789.

BEFORE your letter, which I received yesterday, I was in the anxious fituation of a king, who hourly expects a courier from his general, with the news of a decifive engagement. I had abstained from writing, for fear of dropping a word, or betraying a feeling, which might render you too cautious or too bold. On the famous 8th of April, between twelve and two. I reflected that the bulinefs was determined; and each fucceeding day I computed the fpeedy approach of your meffenger, with favorable or melancholy tidings. When I broke the feal, I expected to read, " What a damned unlucky fellow " you are! Nothing tolerable was offered, and I " indignantly withdrew the eftate." I did remember the fate of poor Lenborough, and I was afraid of your magnanimity. &c. It is whimfical enough, but it is human nature, that I now begin to think of the deep rooted foundations of land, and the airy fabric of the funds. I not only confent, but even wifh, to have eight or ten thousand pounds on a good mortgage. The pipe of wine you fent to me was feized, and would have been confifcated, if the government of Berne had not treated me with the most flattering and distinguished civility : they not only releafed the wine, but they paid out of their own pocket the fhares to which the bailiff and the informer were entitled by law. I fhould not forget that the bailiff refused to accept of his part. Poor Devverdun's conftitution is quite broken; he has had two or three attacks, not fo violent as the first : every time the door is haftily opened. I expect to hear of fome fatal accident : the best or worst hopes of the phyficians are only that he may linger fome time longer; but, if he lives till the fummer, they propose fending him to fome mineral waters at Aix, in Savoy. You will be glad to hear that I am now affured of poffeffing, during my life, this delightful house and garden. The act has been lately executed in the best form, and the hand fomest manner. I know not what to fay of your miracles at home: we rejoice in the king's recovery, and its ministerial confequences; and I cannot be infenfible to the hope, at least the chance, of feeing in this country a first lord of trade, or fecretary at war. In your anfwer, which I fhall impatiently expect, you will give me a full and true account of your defigns, which by this time must have dropt, or be determined at leaft, for the prefent year. If you come, it is high time that we fhould look out for a houfe-a talk much lefs eafy than you may poffibly imagine. Among new kooks, I recommend to you the Count de Mirabeau's great work, "Sur " la Monarchie Pruffienne;" it is in your own way, and gives a very just and complete idea of that wonderful machine. His "Correspondence Secrète" is diabolically good, Adieu. Ever yours,

205

LAUSANNE, June 13. 1789. You are in truth a wife, active, indefatigable, and ineftimable friend; and as our virtues are often connected with our faults, if you were more tame and placid, you would be perhaps of lefs ufe and value : A very important and difficult transaction feems to be nearly termind ate with fuccefs and mutual fatisfaction: we feem to run before the wind with a profperous gale; and, unlefs we fhould ftrike on fome fecret rocks which I do not forefee, fhall, on or before the 31ft July, enter the harbour of Content; though I cannot purfue the metaphor by adding we fhall land, fince our operation is of a very opposite tendency. I could not eafily forgive myfelf for fhutting you up in a dark room with parchments and attornies, did I not reflect that this propably is the laft material trouble hat you will ever have on my account; and that after the labors and delays of twenty years, I shall at laft attain what I have always fighed for, a clear and competent income, above my wants, and equal to my wilhes. In this contemplation you will be fufficiently rewarded. I hope  will be content with our title-deeds, for I cannot furnish another fbred of parchment. Mrs. Gibbon's jointure is fecured on the Beriton effate, and her legal confent is requifite for the fale. Again and again I must repeat my hope that fhe is perfectly fatisfied, and that the clofe of her life may not be imbittered by fufpicion, or fear, or discontent. What new fecurity does the prefer,-the funds, the mortgage, or your land? At all events the must be made eafy. I wrote to her again fome time ago, and begged that if fhe were too weak to write, fhe would defire Mrs. Gould or Mrs Holroyd to give me a line concerning her ftate of health. To this no answer: I am afraid fhe is difpleafed.

Now for the difpofal of the money: I approve of the 80001. mortgage on Beriton; and honor your prudence in not flowing, by the comparison of the rent and interest how foolish it is to purchase land.

There is a chance of my drawing a confiderable fuma into this country, for an arrangement which you yourfelf muft approve, but which I have not time to explain at prefent. For the fake of difpatching, by this evening's polt, an anfwer to your letter which arrived this morning, I confine myfelf to the needful, but in the courfe of a few days I will fend a more familiar epiftle. Adieu. Ever yours.

LAUSANNE, July 14, 1789. POOR Devverdun is no more: he expired Saturday the 4th inftant; and in his unfortunate fituation. death could only be viewed by himfelf, and by his friends, in the light of a confummation devoutly to be wilhed. Since September he has had a dozen apoplectic ftrokes, more or lefs violent: in the intervals between them his ftrength gradually decayed; every principle of life was exhaufted; and had he continued to drag a miferable existence, he must probably have furvived the loss of his faculties. Of all misfortunes this was what he himfelf most apprehended: but his reafon was clear and calm to the laft; he beheld his approaching diffolution with the firmoels of a philospher. I fancied that time and reflection had prepared me for the event; but the habits of three-and-thirty years friendship are not fo eafily broken. The first days, and more especially the first nights, were indeed painful. Last Wednesday and Saturday it would not have been in my power to write. I must now recollect myfelf, fince it is neceffary for me not only to impart the news, but to alk your opinion in a very ferious and doubtful queftion, which must be decided without without lofs of time. I fhall flate the facts, but as I am on the fpot, and as new lights may occur, I do not promife implicit obedience.

200

Had my poor friend died without a will, a female first coufin fettled fomewhere in the north of Germany, and whom I believe he had never feen, would have been his heir at law. In the next degree he had feveral coufins; and one of thefe, an old companion, by name Mr. de Montagny, he has chofen for his heir. As this house and garden was the best and clearest part of poor Devverdun's fortune; as there is a heavy duty or fine (what they call lods) on every change of property out of the legal defcent; as Montagny has a fmall eftate and a large family, it was neceffary to make fome provision in his favor. The will therefore leaves me the option of enjoying this place during my life, on paying the fum of 2501. (I reckon in English money) at prefent, and an annual rent of 301.; or elfe, of purchasing the house and garden for a fum which, including the duty, will amount to 2500 l. If I value the rent of 301. at twelve years purchase, I may acquire my enjoyment for life at about the rate of 6001.; and the remaining 1900'l. will be the difference between that tenure and abfo-Iute perpetual property. As you have never accufed me of too much zeal for the intereft of posterity, you will eafily guefs which fcale at first preponderated. I deeply felt the advantage of acquiring, for the smaller fum, every poffible enjoyment, as long as I myfelf flould be capable of enjoying: I rejected, with fcorp. the idea of giving 19001. for ideal pofthumous property; and I deemed it of little moment whole name, VOL. I. P after my death, fhould be inferibed on my houfe and garden at Laufanne. How often did I repeat to myfelf the philofophical lines of Pope, which feem to determine the queftion:

Pray Heaven, cries Swift, it last as you go on; I wish to God this house had been your own. Pity to build without or fon or wise: Why, you'll enjoy it only all your life. Well, if the use be mine, does it concern one. Whether the name belong to Pope or Vernon?

In this ftate of felf-fatisfaction I was not much difturbed by all my real or nominal friends, who exhort me to prefer the right of purchafe: among fuch friends, fome are carelefs and fome are ignorant; and the judgment of thofe, who are able and willing to form an opinion, is often biaffed by fome felfifth or focial affection, by fome vifible or invifible intereft. But my own reflections have gradually and forcibly driven me from my first propensity; and thefe reflecations I will now proceed to enumerate:

1. I can make this purchafe with eafe and prudence. As I have had the pleafure of not hearing from you very lately, I flatter myfelf that you advance on a carpet road, and that almost by the receipt of this letter (July 31ft) the acres of Beriton will be tranfmuted into fixteen thousand pounds: if the payment be not absolutely completed by that day,  will not foruple, I suppose, depositing the 2600 l. at Gossing's, to meet my draught. Should he hefitate, I can defire Darrel to fell quantum fufficit of my fhort annuities. As foon as the new fettlement of my affairs is made, I shall be able, after deducting this fum, to fquare my expense to my income, &c.

211

2 On mature confideration, I am perhaps lefs felfifh and lefs philofophical than I appear at firft fight: indeed, were I not fo, it would now be in my power to turn my fortune into life-annuities, and let the Devil take the hindmoft. I feel, (perhaps it is foolifh,) but I feel that this little paradife will pleafe me ftill more when it is abfolutely my own; and that I fhall be encouraged in every improvement of ufe or beauty, by the prospect that, after my departure, it will be enjoyed by fome perfon of my own choice. I fometimes reflect with pleafure that my writings will furvive me; and that idea is at leaft as vain and chimerical.

3. The heir, Mr. de Montagny, is an old acquaintance. My fituation of a life-holder is rather new and fingular in this country : the laws have not provided for many nice cafes which may arife between the landlord and tenant: fome I can forefee, others have been fuggefted, many more I might feel when it would be too late. His right of property might plague and confine me; he might forbid my lending to a friend, infpect my conduct, check my improvements, call for fecurities, repairs, &c. But if I purchafe, I walk on my own terrace fierce and erect, the free mafter of one of the moft delicious fpots on the globe.

Should I ever migrate homewards, (you ftare, but fuch an event is lefs improbable than I could have thought it two years ago,) this place would be difputed by ftrangers and natives.

Weigh these reasons , and fend me without delay

P 3

a rational explicit opinion, to which I fhall pay fuch regard as the nature of circumftances will allow. But, alas! when all is determined, I fhall poffefs this houfe, by whatfoever tenure, without friendfhip or domeftic fociety. I did not imagine, fix years ago, that a plan of life fo congenial to my wifhes, would fo fpeedily vanifh. I cannot write upon any other fubject. Adieu, your's ever.

LAUSANNE, August 1789.

AFTER receiving and difpatching the power of attorney, last Wednesday, I opened, with fome palpitation; the unexpected miffive which arrived this morning. The perufal of the contents spoiled my breakfast. They are difagreeable in themselves, alarming in their confequences, and peculiarly unpleafant at the prefent moment, when I hoped to have formed and fecured the arrangements of my future life. I do not perfectly understand what are thefe deeds which are fo inflexibly required; the wills and marriage-fettlements I have fufficiently anfwered. But your arguments do not convince * and I have very little hope from the Lenborough fearch. What will be the event? If his objections are only the refult of legal forupulofity, furely they might be removed, and every chink might be filled, by a general bond of indemnity, in which I boldly alk you to join, as it will be a fubftantial important. act of friendship, without any possible risk to yourfelf or your fucceffors. Should he ftill remain obdurate, I must believe what I already fuspect, that * repents of his purchase, and withes to elude the conclusion. Our cafe would be then hopelefs, ibi omnis effusus labor, and the effate would be returned on our hands with the taint of a bad title. The refufal of mortgage does not pleafe me; but furely our offer fhows fome confidence in the goodnefs of my title. If he will not take eight thousand pounds at four per cent. we must look out elfewhere; new doubts and delays will arife, and I am perfuaded that you will not place an implicit confidence in any attorney. I know not as yet your opinion about my Laufanne purchafe. If you are against it, the prefent polition of affairs gives you great advantage, &c. &c. The Severys are all well; an uncommon circumstance for the four perfons of the family at once. They are now at Mex, a country-house fix miles from hence, which I visit to-morrow for two or three days. They often come to town, and we shall contrive to pais a part of the autumn together at Rolle. I want to change the fcene; and beautiful as the garden and prospect must appear to every eye, I feel that the flate of my own mind cafts a gloom over them; every fpot, every walk, every bench, recals the memory of those hours, of those conversations, which will return no more. But I tear myfelf from the fubject. I could not help writing to-day, though I do not find I have faid any thing very material. As you must be confcious that you have agitated me, you will not postpone any agreeable, or even decifive intelligence. I almost hesitate, whether I shall run over to England, to confult with you on the fpot, and to fly from poor Devverdun's fhade, which meets me at every turn. I did not expect to have felt his lofs fo fharply. But fix hundred miles! Why are we fo far off ?

213

P 3

Once more. What is the difficulty of the title? Will men of fense, in a fensible country, never get rid of the tyranny of lawyers? more oppreffive and ridiculous than even the old yoke of the clergy. Is not a term of feventy or eighty years, nearly twenty in my own perfon, fufficient to prove our legal pof. feffion ? Will not the records of fines and recoveries atteft that I am free from any bar of entails and fettlements? Confult fome fage of the law, whether their prefent demand be neceffary and legal. If your ground be firm, force them to execute the agreement or forfeit the deposit. But if, as I much fear, they have a right, and a wifh, to elude the confummation, would it not be better to release them at once, than to be hung up for five years, as in the cafe of Lovegrove, which coft me in the end four or five thousand pounds? You are bold, you are wife; confult, refolve, act. In my penultimate letter I dropped a ftrange hint, that a migration homeward was not impoffible. I know not what to fay; my mind is all afloat; yet you will not reproach me with caprice or inconflancy. How many years did you damn my fcheme of retiring to Laufanne! I executed that plan; I found as much happiness as is compatible with human nature, and during four years (1783 - 1787) I never breathed a figh of repentance. On my return from England the fcene was changed : I found only a faint femblance of Devverdun, and that femblance was each day fading from my fight. I have paffed an anxious year, but my anxiety is now at an end , and the profpect before me is a melancholy folitude. I am still deeply rooted in this country; the poffeffion of this paradife, the friendfhip of the Severys, a mode of fociety fuited to my tafte, and the enormous trouble and expense of a migration. Yet in England (when the prefent clouds are difpelled) I could form a very comfortable eftablifhment in London, or rather at Bath; and I have a very noble country - feat at about ten miles from East Grinstead in Suffex 89. That fpot is dearer to me than the reft of the three kingdoms; and I have fometimes wondered how two men, fo opposite in their tempers and purfuits, should have imbibed fo long and lively a propenfity for each other. Sir Stanier Porten is just dead. He has left his widow with a moderate penfion, and two children, my nearest relations : the eldest, Charlotte, is about Louifa's age, and alfo a most amiable fenfible young creature. I have conceived a romantic idea of educating and adopting her; as we defcend into the vale of years our infirmities require fome domeftic female fociety : Charlotte would be the comfort of my age, and I could reward her care and tendernels with a decent fortune. A thousand difficulties oppose the execution of the plan, which I have never opened but to you; yet it would be lefs impracticable in England than in Switzerland. Adieu. I am wounded; pour some oil into my wounds : yet I am lefs unhappy fince I have thrown my mind upon paper.

Are you not amazed at the French revolution? They have the power, will they have the P 4 moderation, to establish a good constitution ? Adieu, ever yours.

LAUSANNE, Sept. 9, 1789. WITHIN an hour after the reception of your laft. I drew my pen for the purpole of a reply, and my exordium ran in the following words : " I find by " experience, that it is much more rational, as " well as eafy, to answer a letter of real business " by the return of the poft." This important truth is again verified by my own example. After writing three pages I was called away by a very rational motive, and the post departed before I could return to the conclusion. A fecond delay was colored by fome decent pretence. Three weeks have flipped away, and I now force myfelf on a talk. which I fhould have difpatched without an effort on the first fummons. My only excuse is, that I had little to write about English business, and that I could write nothing definitive about my Swifs affairs. And first, as Aristotle fays of the first,

1. I was indeed in low fpirits when I fent what you fo juftly ftyle my difmal letter; but I do affure you, that my own feelings contributed much more to fink me, than any events or terrors relative to the fale of Beriton. But I again hope and truft, from your confolatory epiftle, that, &c. &c.

2. My Swifs transaction has suffered a great alteration. I shall not become the proprietor of my house and garden at Lausanne, and I relinquish the phantom with more regret than you could easily imagine. But I have been determined by a difficulty, which at first appeared of little moment, but which has gradually fwelled to an alarming magnitude. There is a law in this country, as well as in fome provinces of France, which is flyled le droit de retrait, le retrait lignager, (Lord Loughborough must have heard of it.) by which the relations of the deceased are entitled to redeem a house or estate at the price for which it has been fold; and as the fum fixed by poor Deyverdun is much below its known value, a crowd of competitors are beginning to flart. The beft opinions (for they are di. vided) are in my favor, that I am not fubject to le droit de retrait, fince I take not as a purchaser, but as a legatee. But the words of the will are fomewhat ambiguous, the event of law is always uncertain, the administration of justice at Berne (the last appeal) depends too much on favor and intrigue; and it is very doubtful whether I could revert to the lifeholding, after having chofen and loft the property. Thefe confiderations engaged me to open a negociation with Mr. de Montagny, through the me. dium of my friend the judge; and as he most ardently wifnes to keep the houfe, he confented, though with fome reluctance, to my propofals. Yesterday he figned a covenant in the most regular and binding form, by which he allows my power of transferring my intereft, interprets in the moft ample fenfe my right of making alterations, and ex. prefsly renounces all claim, as landlord, of vifiting or infpecting the premifes. I have promifed to lend him twelve thousand livres, (between feven and eight hundred pounds,) fecured on the houfe and land. The mortgage is four times its value; the intereft of four pounds per cent, will be annually difcharged by the rent of thirty guineas. So that I am now tranquil on that fcore for the remainder of my days. I hope that time will gradually reconcile me to the place which I have inhabited with my poor friend; for in fpite of the cream of London, I am ftill perfuaded that no other place is fo well adapted to my tafte and habits of ftudious and focial life.

Far from delighting in the whirl of a metropolis. my only complaint against Laufanne is the great number of ftrangers, always of English, and now of French, by whom we are infefted in fummer. Yet we have efcaped the damned great ones, the Count d'Artois, the Polignacs, &c. who flip by us to Turin. What a fcene is France! While the affembly is voting abstract propositions, Paris is an independent republic ; the provinces have neither authority nor freedom, and poor Necker declares that credit is no more, and that the people refuse to pay taxes. Yet I think you must be feduced by the abolition of tithes. If Eden goes to Paris you may have fome curious information. Give me fome account of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas. Do they live with Lord North? I hope they do. When will parliament be diffolved? Are you ftill Coventrymad? I embrace my Lady, the fprightly Maria, and the fmiling Louifa. Alas! alas! you will never come to Switzerland. Adieu, ever yours.

LAUSANNE, Sept. 25th, 1789.

Alas! what perils do environ. The man who meddles with cold iron.

ALAS! what delays and difficulties do attend the man who meddles with legal and landed bufinefs! Yet if it be only to difappoint your expectation, I am not fo very nervous at this new provoking obftacle. I had totally forgotten the deed in queftion, which was contrived in the laft year of my father's life, to tie his hands and regulate the diforder of his affairs; and which might have been to eafily cancelled by Sir Stanier, who had not the smallest interest in it, either for himself or his family. The amicable fuit, which is now become neceffary, must, I think, be fhort and unambiguous, yet I cannot help dreading the crotchets, that lurk under the chancellor's great wig; and, at all events, I forefee fome additional delay and expense. The golden pill of the two thousand eight hundred pounds has foothed my difcontent; and if it be fafely lodged with the Goflings, I agree with you, in confidering it as an unequivocal pledge of a fair and willing purchaler. It is indeed chiefly in that light I now rejoice in fo large a deposit, which is no longer necessary in its full extent. You are apprized by my last letter that I have reduced myfelf to the life-enjoyment of the house and garden. And, in spite of my feelings, I am every day more convinced that I have chosen the fafer fide. I believe my caufe to have been good. but it was doubtful. Law in this country is not fo expensive as in England, but it is more troublesome. I must have gone to Berne, have folicited my judges in perfon; a vile cuftom! the event was uncertain; and during at leaft two years, I fhould have been in a ftate of fuspense and anxiety; till the conclufion of which it would have been madnefs to have attempted any alteration or improvement. According to my prefent arrangement I shall want no more than eleven hundred pounds of the two thousand, and I suppose you will direct Gosling to lay out the remainder in India bonds, that it may not lie quite dead, while I am accountable to * for the interest. The elderly lady in a male habit. who informed me that York fhire is a register county. is a certain judge, one Sir William Blackstone, whofe name you may poffibly have heard. After ftating the danger of purchafers and creditors, with regard to the title of estates on which they lay out or lend their money, he thus continues: " In Scot-" land every act and event regarding the transmission " of property is regularly entered on record; and " fome of our own provincial divisions, particularly " the extended county of York and the populous " county of Middlefex, have prevailed with the " legiflature to crect fuch registers in their respective " districts. " (Blackstone's Commentaries, vol. ii. p. 343, edition of 1774, in quarto.) If I am miftaken, it is in pretty good company; but I fuspect that we are all right, and that the register is confined to one or two ridings. As we have, alas ! two or three months before us, I fhould hope that your prudent fagacity will discover some sound land, in cafe you fhould not have time to arrange another mortgage. I now write in a hurry, as I am just fetting out for Rolle, where I shall be fettled with cook and fervants in a pleafant apartment, till the middle of November. The Severys have a house there, where they pals the autumn. I am not forry to vary the fcene for a few weeks, and I with to be absent while fome alterations are making in my houfe at Laufanne. I wilh the change of air may be of fervice to Severy the father, but we do not at all like his prefent ftate of health. How completely, alas, how completely ! could I now lodge you : but your firm refolve of making me a visit feems to have vanished like a dream. Next fummer you will not find five hundred pounds for a rational friendly expedition; and fbould parliament be diffolved. you will perhaps find five thousand for ____ I cannot think of it with patience. Pray take ferious ftrenuous measures for fending me a pipe of excellent Madeira in cafk, with fome dozens of Malmfey Madeira. It fhould be configned to Meffrs. Romberg Voituriers at Oftend, and I must have timely notice of its march. We have fo much to fay about France, that I fuppofe we fhall never fay any thing. That country is now in a state of diffolution. Adieu.

221

LAUSANNE, December 15th, 1789.

You have often reason to accuse my strange filence and neglect in the most important of my own affairs; for I will presume to affert, that in a business of yours of equal confequence, you should not find me cold or careless. But on the present occasion my filence is, perhaps, the highest compliment I ever paid you. You remember the answer of Philip of Macedon:

" Philip may fleep, while he knows that Parmenio " is awake." I expected, and, to fay the truth, I wifhed that my Parmenio would have decided and acted, without expecting my dilatory anfwer, and in his decilion I fhould have acquiefced with implicit confidence. But fince you will have my opinion, let us confider the prefent flate of my affairs. In the courfe of my life I have often known, and fometimes felt, the difficulty of getting money, but I now find myfelf involved in a more fingular diftrefs, the difficulty of placing it, and if it continues much longer, I fhall almoft wifh for my land again.

I perfectly agree with you, that it is bad management to purchafe in the funds when they do not yield four pounds per cent. * * * * * * * * * * * * *

Some of this money I can place fafely, by means of my banker here; and I fhall poffefs, what I have always defired, a command of cafh, which I cannot abufe to my prejudice, fince I have it in my power to fupply with my pen any extraordinary or fanciful indulgence of expende. And fo much, much indeed, for pecuniary matters. What would you have me fay of the affairs of France? We are too near, and too remote, to form an accurate judgement of that wonderful fcene. The abufes of the court and government called aloud for reformation; and it has happened, as it will always happen, that an innocent well-difpofed Prince has paid the forfeit of the fins of his predeceffors; of the ambition of Lewis the Fourtee, h, of the profusion of Lewis the Fifteenth. The French nation had a glorious opportunity, but they have abufed, and may lofe their advantages. If they had been content with a liberal translation of our fystem, if they had refoected the prerogatives of the crown, and the privileges of the nobles, they might have raifed a folid fabric on the only true foundation, the natural ariftocracy of a great country. How different is the prospect! Their King brought a captive to Paris. after his palace had been ftained with the blood of his guards; the nobles in exile; the clergy plundered in a way which ftrikes at the root of all property; the capital an independent republic; the union of the provinces diffolved; the flames of difcord kindled by the worft of men; (in that light I confider Mirabeau;) and the honefteft of the affembly, a fet of wild vifionaries, (like our Dr. Price,) who gravely debate, and dream about the effab. lifhment of a pure and perfect democracy of five-andtwenty millions, the virtues of the golden age, and the primitive rights and equality of mankind, which would lead, in fair reafoning, to an equal partition of lands and money. How many years must elapfe before France can recover any vigor, or refume her station among the Powers of Europe! As yet, there is no fymptom of a great man, a Richlieu or a Cromwell, ariling, either to reftore the monarchy, or to lead the commonwealth. The weight of Paris, more deeply engaged in the funds than all the reft of the kingdom, will long delay a bankruptcy; and if it fould happen, it will be. both in the caule and the effect, a measure of weakness.

223

rather than of strength. You fend me to Chamberry, to fee a Prince and an Archbishop. Alas! we have exiles enough here, with the Maréchal de Caftries and the Duke de Guignes at their head; and this inundation of ftrangers, which used to be confined to the fummer, will now ftagnate all the winter. The only ones whom I have feen with pleafure are Mr. Mounier, the late prefident of the national affembly, and the Count de Lally; they have both diped with me. Mounier, who is a ferious dry politician, is returned to Dauphiné. Lally is an amiable man of the world, and a poet: he paffes the winter here. You know how much I prefer a quiet felect fociety to a crowd of names and titles. and that I always feek conversation with a view to amusement, rather than information. What happy countries are England and Switzerland, if they know and preferve their happinefs.

I have a thouland things to fay to my Lady, Maria, and Louifa, but I can add only a fhort poftfcript about the Madeira. Good Madeira is now become effential to my health and reputation. May your hogfhead prove as good as the laft; may it not be intercepted by the rebels or the Auftrians. What a fcene again in that country! Happy England! Happy Switzerland! I again repeat, adieu.

LAUSANNE, January 17th, 1790.

Your two last episitles, of the 7th and 11th inflant, were fomewhat delayed on the road; they arrived within two days of each other, the last this morning (the 27th); fo that I answer by the first, or at least leaft by the fecond post. Upon the whole, your French method, though fometimes more rapid, anpears to me lefs fure and fleady than the old German highway &c. &c.

224

But enough of this. A new and brighter prospect feems to be breaking upon us, and few events of that kind have ever given me more pleafure than your fuccefsful negociation and * * * *'s fatisfactory anfwer. The agreement is, indeed, equally convenient for both parties : no time or expense will be wafted in forutinizing the title of the eftate; the intereft will be fecured by the claufe of five per cent. and I lament with you, that no larger fum than eight thousand pounds can be placed on Beriton, without afking (what might be fomewhat impudent) a collateral fecurity, &c. &c.

But I wish you to chuse and execute one or the other of these arrangements with fage difference and absolute power. I shorten my letter, that I may difpatch it by this poft. I fee the time, and I shall rejoice to fee it at the end of twenty years, when my cares will be at an end, and our friendly pages will be no longer fullied with the repetition of dirty land and vile money; when we may expatiate on the politics of the world and our perfonal fentiments. Without expecting your answer of bufinefs, I mean to write foon in a purer ftyle, and I with to lay open to my friend the flate of my mind, which (exclusive of all wordly concerns) is not perfectly at eafe. In the mean while, I must add two or 0

VOL. I.

three fhort articles. 1. I am aftonifhed at Elmfley's filence, and the immobility of your picture, Mine fhould have departed long fince, could I have found a fure opportunity, &c. &c. Adieu, yours.

LAUSANNE, May 15th, 1790.

SINCE the first origin (ab ovo) of our connexion and correspondence, so long an interval of filence has not intervened, as far as I remember, between us, &c. &c.

From my filence you conclude that the moral complaint, which I had infinuated in my laft, is either infignificant or fanciful. The conclusion is rafh. But the complaint in queftion is of the nature of a flow lingering difeafe, which is not attended. with any immediate danger. As I have not leifure to expatiate, take the idea in three words: " Since the " lofs of poor Devverdun, I am alone; and even " in Paradife, folitude is painful to a focial mind. "When I was a dozen years younger, I fcarcely felt " the weight of a fingle existence amidst the crowds " of London, of parliament, of clubs; but it will " prefs more heavily upon me in this tranguil land, " in the decline of life, and with the increase of " infirmities. Some expedient, even the most def-" perate, must be embraced, to secure the domestic " fociety of a male or female companion. But I am " not in a hurry; there is time for reflection and " advice." During this winter fuch finer feelings have been fuspended by the groffer evil of bodily pain. On the ninth of February I was feized by fuch a fit of the gout as I had never known, though I must be thankful that its dire effects have been confined to the feet and knees, without afcending to the more noble parts. With fome viciffitudes of better and worfe, I have groaned between two and three months; the debility has furvived the pain, and though now eafy, I am carried about in my chair, without any power, and with a very diftant chance, of fupporting myfelf, from the extreme weaknefs and contraction of the joints of my knees. Yet I am happy in a skilful phyfician, and kind affiduous friends: every evening, during more than three months, has been enlivened (excepting when I have been forced to refule them) by fome cheerful vifits, and very often by a chosen party of both fexes. How different is fuch fociety from the folitary evenings which I have paffed in the tumult of London! It is not worth while fighting about a fhadow, but fhould I ever return to England, Bath, not the metropolis, would be my last retreat.

227

Your portrait is at laft arrived in perfect condition, and now occupies a confpicuous place over the chimney-glafs in my library. It is the object of general admiration; good judges (the few) applaud the work; the name of Reynolds opens the eyes and mouths of the many; and were not I afraid of making you vain, I would inform you that the original is not allowed to be more than five-andthirty. In fpite of private reluctance and public difcontent, I have honorably difmiffed my/elf^{}. I fhall arrive at Sir Jofhua's before the end of the month; he will give me a look, and perhaps a touch; and you will be indebted to the prefident one guinea for the carriage. Do not be nervous, I am not rolled up; had I been fo, you might have gazed on my charms four months ago. I want fome account of yourfelf, of my Lady, (thall we never directly correspond?) of Louisa, and of Maria. How has the latter fince her launch fupported a quiet winter in Suffex? I fo much rejoice in your divorce from that b--- Kitty Coventry, that I care not what marriage you contract. A great city would fuit your dignity, and the duties which would kill me in the first feffion, would fupply your activity with a conftant fund of amufement. But tread foftly and furely; the ice is deceitful. the water is deep, and you may be fouled over head and ears before you are aware. Why did not you or Elmsley fend me the African pamphlet". by the poft? it would not have coft much. You have fuch a knack of turning a nation, that I am afraid you will triumph (perhaps by the force of argument) over justice and humanity. But do you not expect to work at Belzebub's fugar plantations in the infernal regions, under the tender government of a negro driver? I fhould fuppofe both my Lady and Mifs Firth very angry with you.

Q 2

As to the bill for prints, which has been too long neglected, why will you not exercife the power, which I have never revoked, over all my cafh at the Goflings? The Severy family has paffed a very favorable winter; the young man is impatient to hear from a family which he places above all others: yet he will generoufly write next week, and fend you a drawing of the alterations in the houfe. Do not raife your ideas; you know I am fatisfied with convenience in architecture, and fome elegance in furniture. I admire the coolnefs with which you afk me to epiftolize Reynell and Elmfley, as if a letter were fo eafy and pleafant a tafk; it appears lefs fo to me every day.

1790.

220

YOUR indignation will melt into pity, when you hear that for feveral weeks paft I have been again confined to my chamber and my chair. Yet I mult haften, generoufly haften, to exculpate the gout, my old enemy, from the curfes which you already pour on his head. He is not the caufe of this diforder, although the confequences have been fomewhat fimilar. I am fatisfied that this effort of nature has faved me from a very dangerous, perhaps a fatal, crifis; and I liften to the flattering hope that it may tend to keep the gout at a more refpectful diffance, &c. &c.

The whole fheet has been filled with dry felfifh bufinefs; but I muft and will referve fome lines of the cover for a little friendly converfation. I paffed four days at the caftle of Copet with Necker; and could have wifhed to have fhown him, as a warning to any afpiring youth poffeffed with the dæmon of ambition. With all the means of private happinefs in his power, he is the moft miferable of human beings: the paft, the prefent, and the future are equally odious to him. When I fuggefted fome domeftic amufements of books, building, &c. he anfwered, with a deep tone of defpair, "Dans l'état

23

" où je suis, je ne puis sentir que le coup de vent " qui m'a abbattu." How different from the careles cheerfulnefs with which our poor friend Lord North fupported his fall! Madame Necker maintains more external composure, mais le Diable n'y perd rien. It is true that Necker wifhed to be carried into the clofet, like old Pitt, on the fhoulders of the people; and that he has been ruined by the democracy which he had raifed. I believe him to be an able financier, and know him to be an honeft man ; too honeft, perhaps, for a minister. His rival Calonne has paffed through Laufanne, in his way from Turin . and was foon followed by the Prince of Condé. with his fon and grandfon; but I was too much indifposed to fee them. They have, or have had, fome wild projects of a counter-revolution : horfes have been bought, men levied : fuch foolifh attempts must end in the ruin of the party. Burke's book is a most admirable medicine against the French difease, which has made too much progress even in this happy country. I admire his eloquence, I approve his politics, I adore his chivalry, and I can forgive even his fuperstition. The primitive church, which I have treated with fome freedom, was itfelf at that time an innovation, and I was attached to the old Pagan establishment. The French spread fo many lies about the fentiments of the English nation, that I with the most confiderable men of all parties and defcriptions would join in fome public act, declaring themfelves fatisfied and refolved to upport our present constitution. Such a declaration would have a wonderful effect in Europe; and, were I thought worthy, I myfelf would be proud to fubferibe it. I have a great mind to fend you fomething of a fketch, fuch as all thinking men might adopt.

23 E

I have intelligence of the approach of my Madeira. I accept with equal pleafure the fecond pipe, now in the Torrid Zone. Send me fome pleafant details of your domeftic flate, of Maria, &c. If my Lady thinks that my filence is a mark of indifference, my Lady is a goofe. I muft have you all at Laufanne next fummer.

LAUSANNE, August 7, 1790. I ANSWER at once your two letters; and I fhould probably have taken earlier notice of the first, had I not been in daily expectation of the fecond. I must begin on the fubject of what really interests me the moft, your glorious election for Briftol. Moft fincerely do I congratulate your exchange of a curfed expensive jilt, who deferted you for a rich Jew, for an honorable connexion with a chafte and virtuous matron, who will probably be as conftant as the is difinterefted. In the whole range of election from Caithnefs to St. Ives, I much doubt whether there be a fingle choice fo truly honorable to the member and the conftituents. The fecond commercial city invites, from a diftant province, an independent gentleman, known only by his active fpirit, and his writings on the fubject of trade; and names him, without intrigue or expense, for her representative : even the voice of party is filenced, while factions ftrive which fhall applaud the moft.

24

You are now fure, for feven years to come, of never wanting food ; I mean bufinefs : what a crowd of fuitors or complainants will befiege your door ! what a load of letters and memorials will be heaped on your table ! I much queftion whether even you will not fometimes exclaim, Ohe! jam fatis eft ! but that is your affair. Of the excursion to Coventry I cannot decide, but I hear it is pretty generally blamed : but, however, I love gratitude to an old friend ; and fhall not be very angry if you damned them with a farewel to all eternity. But I cannot reprefs my indignation at the ufe of those foolifh. obfolete, odious words, Whig and Tory. In the American war they might have fome meaning; and then your Lordship was a Tory, although you fuppofed yourfelf a Whig: fince the coalition, all general principles have been confounded; and if there ever was an opposition to men, not meafures, it is the prefent. Luckily both the leaders are great men ; and , whatever happens, the country muft fall upon its legs. What a ftrange mift of peace and war feems to hang over the ocean! We can perceive nothing but fecrecy and vigor; but those are excellent qualities to perceive in a minister. From yourfelf and politics I now return to my private concerns, which I fhall methodically confider under the three great articles of mind, body, and effate.

1. I am not abfolutely difpleafed at your firing fo haftily at the hint, a tremendous hint, in my laft letter. But the danger is not fo ferious or imminent as you feem to fufpect; and I give you my word, that, before I take the flighteft ftep which can bind me either in law, conscience, or honor, I will faithfully communicate, and we will freely difcufs, the whole ftate of the bufinefs. But at prefent there is not any thing to communicate or difcufs; I do affure you that I have not any particular object in view: I am not in love with any of the hyænas of Laufanne, though there are fome who keep their claws tolerably well pared. Sometimes, in a folitary mood, I have fancied myfelf married to one or another of those whose fociety and conversation are the most pleasing to me; but when I have painted in my fancy all the probable confequences of fuch an union. I have ftarted from my dream, rejoiced in my escape, and ejaculated a thanksgiving that I was still in poffeffion of my natural freedom. Yet I feel, and fhall continue to feel, that domestic folitude, however it may be alleviated by the world, by ftudy, and even by friendship, is a comfortless state, which will grow more painful as I defcend in the vale of years. At prefent my fituation is very tolerable ; and if at dinner-time, or at my return home in the evening, I fometimes figh for a companion, there are many hours, and many occasions, in which I enjoy the fuperior bleffing of being fole mafter of my own houfe. But your plan, though lefs dangerous, is ftill more abfurd than mine: fuch a couple as you defcribe could not be found; and, if found, would not an fwer my purpofe; their rank and polition would be awkward and ambiguous to myfelf and my acquaintance; and the agreement of three perfons of three characters would be still more impracticable. My plan of Charlotte Porsen is undoubtedly the most defirable; and she might either remain a fpinfter (the cafe is not without example), or marry fome Swifs of my choice, who would increafe and enliven our fociety; and both would have the ftrongeft motives for kind and dutiful behaviour. But the mother has been indirectly founded, and will not hear of fuch a propofal for fome years. On my fide, I would not take her, but as a piece of foft wax which I could model to the language and manners of the country: I muft therefore be patient.

TO LORD SHEFFIELD. 133

Young Severy's letter, which may be now in your hands, and which, for these three or four last posts, has furnished my indolence with a new pretence for delay. has already informed you of the means and circumftances of my refurrection. Tedious indeed was my confinement, fince I was not able to move from my house or chair, from the ninth of February to the first of July, very nearly five months. The first weeks were accompanied with more pain than I have ever known in the gout, with anxious days and fleeplefs nights; and when that pain fubfided, it left a weaknefs in my knees which feemed to have no end. My confinement was however foftened by books, by the poffeffion of every comfort and convenience, by a fucceffion each evening of agreeable company, and by a flow of equal fpirits and general good health. During the laft weeks I descended to the ground floor, poor Deyverdun's apartment, and constructed a chair like Merlin's, in which I could wheel myfelf in the houfe and on the terrace. My patience has been univerfally admired; yet how many thousands have paffed those five months lefs eafily than myfelf. I remember making a remark perfectly fimple, and perfectly true : "At pre-

TO LORD SHEFFIELD.

235

" fent, (I faid to Madame de Severy,) I am not pofi-" tively miferable, and I may reafonably hope a daily " or weekly improvement, till fooner or later in the " fummer I fhall recover new limbs, and new plea-" fures, which I do not now poffefs: have any of you " fuch a profpect?" The prediction has been accomplifhed, and I have arrived to my prefent condition of ftrength, or rather of feeblenefs: I now can walk with tolerable eafe in my garden and fmooth places; but on the rough pavement of the town I ufe, and perhaps fhall ufe, a fedan chair. The Pyrmont waters have performed wonders; and my phyfician (not Tiffot, but a very fenfible man) allows me to hope, that the term of the interval will be in proportion to that of the fit.

Have you read in the English papers, that the government of Berne is overturned, and that we are divided into three democratical leagues? true as what I have read in the French papers, that the English have cut off Pitt's head, and abolished the House of Lords. The people of this country are happy; and in spite of some miscreants, and more foreign emisser, they are fensible of their happinels.

Finally—Inform my Làdy, that I am indignant at a falfe and heretical affertion in her laft letter to Severy, "that friends at a diftance cannot love each "other, if they do not write." I love her better than any woman in the world; indeed I do; and yet I do not write. And fhe herfelf—but I am calm. We have now nearly one hundred French exiles, fome of them worth being acquainted with; particularly a Count de Schomberg, who is become almost my friend; he is a man of the world, of letters, and of fufficient age, fince in 1753 he fucceeded to Maréchal Saxe's regiment of dragoons. As to the rest, I entertain them, and they flatter me: but I wish we were reduced to our Laufanne fociety. Poor France! the state is diffolved, the nation is mad! Adieu.

LAUSANNE. April 8, 1791.

FIRST, of my health: it is now tolerably reftored. my legs are still weak, but the animal in general is in a found and lively condition; and we have great hopes from the fine weather and the Pyrmont waters. I most fincerely wished for the prefence of Maria, to embellish a ball which I gave the 20th of last month to all the beft company, natives and foreigners, of Laufanne, with the aid of the Severys, especially of the mother and fon, who directed the economy, and performed the honors of the fête. It opened about feven in the evening; the affembly of men and women was pleafed and pleafing, the mufic good, the illumination fplendid, the refreshments profuse: at twelve, one hundred and thirty perfons fat down to a very good fupper: at two, I ftole away to bed, in a fnug corner: and I was informed at breakfaft, that the remains of the veteran and young troops, with Severy and his fifter at their head, had concluded the laft dance about a quarter before feven. This magnificent entertainment has gained me great credit; and the expense was more reasonable than you can eafily imagine. This was an extraordinary event, but I give frequent dinners; and in the fummer I have an affembly every Sunday evening. What a wicked wretch! fays my Lady.

TO LORD SHEFFIELD.

I cannot pity you for the accumulation of bufinefs, as you ought not to pity me, if I complained of the tranquillity of Laufanne; we fuffer or enjoy the effects of our own choice. Perhaps you will mutter fomething, of our not being born for ourfelves, of public fpirit (I have formerly read of fuch a thing) of private friendfhip, for which I give you full and ample credit, &c. But your parliamentary operations, at least will probably expire in the month of June; and I fhall refuse to fign the Newhaven conveyance, unlefs I am fatisfied that you will execute the Laufanne vifit this fummer. On the 15th of June, fuppofe Lord, Lady, Maria, and maid, (poor Louifa!) in a post coach, with Etienne on horfeback, fet out from Downing-Street, or Sheffield-Place, crofs the channel from Brighton to Dieppe, visit the National Assembly, buy caps at Paris, examine the ruins of Verfailles, and arrive at Laufanne, without danger or fatigue, the fecond week in July; you will be lodged pleafantly and comfortably, and will not perhaps defpife my fituation. A couple of months will roll, alas! too haftily away : you will all be amufed by new fcenes. new people; and whenever Maria and you, with Severy, mount on horfeback to vifit the country, the glaciers, &c. my Lady and myfelf fhall form a very quiet têt-à-tête at home. In September, if vou are tired, you may return by a direct or indirect way; but I only defire that you will not make the plan impracticable, by grafping at too much. In return, I promife you a vifit of three or four months in the autumn of ninety-two: you and my bookfellers are now my principal attractions in England. You had fome right to growl at hearing of my fupplement in the papers: but Cadell's indifcretion was founded on a bint which I had thrown out in a letter, and which in all probability will never be executed. Yet I am not totally idle. Adicu.

LAUSANNE, May 18, 1791.

I WRITE a fhort letter, on fmall paper, to inform you, that the various deeds, which arrived fafe and in good condition, have this morning been fealed, figned, and delivered, in the prefence of respectable and well-known English witnesses. To have read the aforefaid acts, would have been difficult: to have understood them, impracticable, I therefore figned them with my eyes fhut, and in that implicit confidence, which we freemen and Britons are humbly content to yield to our lawvers and ministers. I hope however, most feriously hope, that every thing has been carefully examined. and that I am not totally ruined. It is not without much impatience that I expect an account of the payment and investment of the purchase - money. It was my intention to have added a new edition of my will; but I have an unexpected call to go to Geneva to-morrow with the Severys, and muft defer that business a few days till after my return. On my return I may poffibly find a letter from you.

TO LORD SHEFFIELD. 1 239

and will write more fully in anfwer: my posthumous work, contained in a fingle fheet, will not ruin you in postage. In the mean while let me defire you either never to talk of Laufanne, or to execute the journey this fummer; after the dispatch of public and private business, there can be no real obstacle but in yourfelf. Pray do not go to war with Ruffia; it is very foolifh. I am quite angry with Pitt. Adieu.

LAUSANNE May 31, 1791.

AT length I fee a ray of funfhine breaking from a dark cloud. Your epiftle of the 12th arrived this morning, the 25th inftant, the day after my return from Geneva; it has been communicated to Severy. We now believe that you intend a vifit to Laufanne this fummer, and we hope that you will execute that intention. If you are a man of honor, you fhall find me one; and, on the day of your arrival at Laufanne, I will ratify my engagement of vifiting the British ille before the end of the year 1792, excepting only the fair and foul exception of the gout. You rejoice me, by proposing the addition of dear Louifa; it was not without a bitter pang that I threw her overboard, to lighten the veffel and fecure the voyage : I was fearful of the governefs, a fecond carriage, and a long train of diffi. culty and expense, which might have ended in blowing up the whole fcheme. But if you can bodkin the fweet creature into the coach, fhe will find an eafy welcome at Laufanne. The first arrangements which I must make before your arrival, may be altered by your own tafte, on a furvey of the premifes, and you will all be commodioufly and pleafantly lodged. You have heard a great deal of the beauty of my house, garden, and fitua. tion : but fuch are their intrinfic value, that, unlefs I am much deceived, they will bear the teft even of exaggerated praife. From my knowledge of your Lordship, I have always entertained fome doubt how you would get through the fociety of a Laufanne winter: but I am fatisfied that, exclusive of friendship, your summer visits to the banks of the Leman Lake will long be remembered as one of the most agreeable periods of your life; and that you will fcarcely regret the amufement of a Suffex Committee of Navigation in the dog - days. You alk for details: what details?'a map of France and a post-book are easy and infallible guides. If the ladies are not afraid of the ocean, you are not ignorant of the paffage from Brighton to Dieppe : Paris will then be in your direct road; and even allowing you to look at the Pandæmonium, the ruins of Verfailles, &c. a fortnight diligently employed will clear you from Sheffield Place to Gibbon Caftle. What can I fay more ?

As little have I to fay on the fubject of wordly matters, which feem now, Jupiter be praifed, to be draving towards a final conclusion; fince when people part with their money, they are indeed ferious. I do not perfectly understand the ratio of the precife fum which you have poured into Gofling's refervoir, but fuppofe it will be explained in a general account.

You have been very dutiful in fending me, what

TO LORD SHEFFIELD.

241

I have always defired, a cut Woodfall on a remarkable debate; a debate, indeed, most remarkable ! Poor  is the most eloquent and rational madman that I ever knew. I love 's feelings, but I deteft the political principles of the man, and of the party. Formerly, you detefted them more ftrongly during the American war, than myfelf. I am half afraid that you are corrupted by your unfortunate connexions. Should you admire the National affembly, we fhall have many an altercation, for I am as high an ariftocrat as Burke himfelf; and he has truly observed, that it is impossible to debate with temper on the fubject of that curfed revolution. In my last excursion to Geneva I frequently faw the Neckers, who by this time are returned to their fummer refidence at Copet. He is much reftored in health and fpirits, especially fince the publication of his laft book, which has probably reached England. Both parties, who agree in abufing him, agree likewife that he is a man of virtue and genius; but I much fear that the pureft intentions have been productive of the most baneful consequences. Our military men, I mean the French, are leaving us every day for the camp of the Princes at Worms, and Support what representation. Their hopes is called are fanguine; I will not answer for their being well grounded : it is certain, however, that the emperor had an interview the 19th inftant with, the Count of Artois at Mantua; and the ariftocrats talk in mysterious language of Spain, Sardinia. the Empire, four or five armies, &c. They will R VOL. I.

doubtless strike a blow this fummer: may it not recoil on their own heads! Adieu. Embrace our female travellers. A short delay!

LAUSANNE, June 12th, 1791. I now begin to fee you all in real motion, fwimming from Brighton to Dieppe, according to my fcheme, and afterwards treading the direct road, which you cannot well avoid, to the turbulent capital of the late kingdom of France. I know not what more to fay, or what further 'inftructions to fend; they would indeed be ufelefs, as you are travelling through a country which has been fometimes vifited by Eaglifhmen : only this let me fay. that in the midft of anarchy the roads were never more fecure than at prefent. As you will with to affift at the national affembly, you will act prudently in obtaining from the French in London a good recommendation to fome leading member ; Cazales, for inftance, or the Abbé Maury. I foon expect from Elmfley a cargo of books; but you may bring me any new pamphlet of exquifite flavor, particularly the laft works of John Lord Sheffiedl, which the dog has always neglected to fend. You will have time to write once more, and you must endeavour, as nearly as poffible, to mark the day of your arrival You may come either by Lyons and Geneva, by Dijon and les Rouffes, or by Dole and Pontarlier. The poft will fail you on the edge of Switzerland, and must be fupplied by hired horfes. I with you to make your laft day's journey eafy, fo as to dine upon the road, and arrive by tea time. The pulfe of the counter-revolution beats high, but I cannot fend you any certain facts. Adieu. I want to hear my Lady abufing me for never writing. All the Severys are very impatient.

TO LORD SHEFFIELD.

Notwithstanding the high premium, I do not abfolutely wish you drowned. Befides all other cares, I must marry and propagate, which would give me a great deal of trouble.

LAUSANNE, July Ift, 1791. In obedience to your orders I direct a flying fhot to Paris, though I have not any thing particular to add, excepting that our impatience is increased in the inverse ratio of time and space. Yet I almost doubt whether you have passed the fea. The news of the King of France's efcape muft have reached you before the 28th, the day of your departure, and the prospect of ftrange unknown diforder may well have fuspended your firmest refolves. The royal animal is again caught, and all may probably be quiet. I was just going to exhort you to pafs through Bruffels and the confines of Germany; a fair Irithifm, fince if you read this, you are already at Paris. The only reasonable advice which now remains, is to ob. tain, by means of Lord Gower, a fufficiency, or even superfluity, of forcible passports, such as leave no room for cavil on a jealous frontier. The frequent intercourfe with Paris has proved that the best and shortest road, instead of Befançon, is by Dijon. Dole, Les Rouffes, and Nyon. Adieu. I warmly embrace the Ladies. It would be idle now to talk of busines. R 2

243

IT has appeared from the foregoing Letters, that a vifit from myfelf and my family, to Mr. Gibbon at Laufanne, had been for fome time in agitation. This long - promifed excursion took place in the month of June 1791, and occasioned a confiderable ceffation of our correspondence. I landed at Dieppe immediately after the flight from, and return to, Paris of the unfortunate Lewis XVI. During my flay in that capital, I had an opportunity of feeing the extraordinary ferment of men's minds, both in the national affembly, and in private focieties, and alfo in my paffage through France to Laufanne, where I recalled to my memory the interefting fcenes I had witneffed, by frequent conversations with my deceased friend. I might have wifhed to record his opinions on the fubject of the French revolution, if he had not expressed them fo well in the annexed Letters. He feemed to suppose, as some of his Letters hint, that I had a tendency to the new French opinions. Never indeed, I can with truth aver. was fuspicion more unfounded; nor could it have been admitted into Mr. Gibbon's mind, but that his extreme friendship for me, and his utter abhorrence of these notions, made him enxious and jealous, even to an excefs, that I fhould not entertain them. He was, however, foon undeceived; he found that I was full as averfe to them as himfelf. I had from the first expressed an opinion, that fuch a change as was aimed at in France, muft derange all the regular governments in Europe, hazard the internal quiet and deareft interefts of this country, and probably end in bringing on mankind a much greater portion of mifery, than the most fanguine reformer had ever promifed to himfelf or others to produce of benefit, by the visionary fchemes of liberty and equality, with which the ignorant and vulgar were misled and abufed.

(244)

Mr. Gibbon at first, like many others, feemed pleafed with the profpect of the reform of inveterate abuses; but he very foon discovered the mifchief which was intended, the imbecility with which conceffions were made, and the ruin that must arife, from the want of resolution or conduct, in the administration of France. He lived to reprobate, in the ftrongest terms poffible, the folly of the first reformers, and the fomething worfe than extravagance and ferocity of their fucceffors. He faw the wild and mifchievous tendency of those pretended reformers, which, while they professed nothing but amendment, really meant deftruction to all focial order; and fo ftrongly was his opinion fixed, as to the danger of hafty innovation, that he became a warm and zealous advocate for every fort of old establishment, which he marked in various ways, fometimes rather ludicroufly; and I recollect, in a circle where French affairs were the topic, and fome Portuguele prefent, he, feemingly with feriousness, argued in favor of the inquifition at Lifbon, and faid he would not, at the prefent moment, give up even that old eftablishment.

R 3

It may, perhaps, not be quite uninterefting to the readers of these Memoirs, to know, that I found Mr. Gibbon at Laufanne in poffeffion of an excellent house; the view from which, and from the terrace. was fo uncommonly beautiful, that even his own pen would with difficulty deferibe the fcene which it commanded. This profpect comprehended every thing grand and magnificent, which could be furnifhed by the fineft mountains among the Alps, the most extensive view of the Lake of Geneva. with a beautifully varied and cultivated country, adorned by numerous villas, and picturefque buildings, intermixed with beautiful maffes of ftately trees. Here my friend received us with a hofpitality and kindness which I can never forget. The best apartments of the houfe were appropriated to our use; the choiceft fociety of the place was fought for, to enliven our vifit, and render every day of it cheerful and agreeable. It was impoffible for any man to be more effeemed and admired than Mr. Gibbon was at Laufanne. The preference he had given to that place, in adopting it for a refidence, rather than his own country, was felt and acknowledged by all the inhabitants; and he may have been faid almost to have given the law to a fet of as willing fubjects as any man ever prefided over. In return for the deference flown to him, he mixed, without any affectation, in all the fociety, I mean all the best fociety, that Laufanne afforded; he could indeed command it, and was, perhaps, for that reafon the more partial to it; for he often declared that he liked fociety more as a relaxation from fludy. than as expecting to derive from it amufement or instruction ; that to books he looked for improvement, not to living perfons. But this I confidered partly as an answer to my expressions of wonder. that a man who might chuse the most various and most generally improved fociety in the world, namely, in England, that he fhould prefer the very limited circle of Laufanne, which he never deferted, but for an occasional visit to M. and Madame Necker. It must not, however, be underftood, that in chusing Laufanne for his home, he was infenfible to the merits of a refidence in England : he was not in poffeffion of an income which corresponded with his notions of ease and comfort in his own country. In Switzerland, his fortune was ample. To this confideration of fortune may be added another, which alfo had its weight; from early youth Mr. Gibbon had contracted a partiality for foreign tafte and foreign habits of life, which made him lefs a ftranger abroad than he was, in fome respects, in his native country. This arofe, perhaps, from having been out of England from his fixteenth to his twenty-firft year; yet, when I came to Laufanne, I found him apparently without relifh for French fociety. During the ftay I made with him he renewed his intercourfe with the principal French who were at Laufanne; of whom there happened to be a confiderable number, diftinguished for rank or talents : many indeed respectable for both ". During my ftay in Switzerland I was not abfent from my friend's houfe, except during a fhort excurfion that we made together to Mr. Necker's at Copet, and a tour to Geneva, Chamouny, over the Col de Balme, to Martigny, St. Maurice, and round the Lake by Vevay to Laufanne. In the focial and fingularly pleafant months that I paffed with Mr. Gibbon, he enjoyed his ufual cheerfulnefs, with good health. Since he left England, in 1788, he had had a fevere attack, mentioned in one of the foregoing letters, of an Eryfipelas, which at laft fettled in one of his legs, and left fomething of a dropfical tendency; for at this time I firft perceived a confiderable degree of fwelling about the ancle.

(247)

R 4

In the beginning of October I left this delightful refidence; and fome time after my return to England, our correspondence recommenced.

(249)

LETTERS

FROM

EDWARD GIBBON Efq.

TO

LORD SHEFFIELD, and Others.

EDWARD GIBBON Eq. to the Hon. Miss HOLROYD.

LAUSANNE, 9th Nov. 1791.

GULLIVER is made to fay, in prefenting his interpreter, "My tongue is in the mouth of my friend." Allow me to fay, with proper expressions and "excuses, My pen is in the hand of my friend;" and the aforefaid friend begs leave thus to continue ".

I remember to have read fomewhere in Rouffeau, of a lover quitting very often his miftrefs, to have the pleafure of corresponding with her. Though not abfolutely your lover, I am very much your admirer, and should be extremely tempted to follow the fame example. The spirit and reason which prevail in your conversation, appear to great advantage in your letters. The three which I have received from Berne, Coblentz, and Bruffels have given me much real pleafure ; first , as a proof that you are often thinking of me; fecondly, as an evidence that you are capable of keeping a refolution ; and thirdly, from their own intrinsic merit and entertainment. The ftyle, without any allowance for hafte or hurry, is perfectly correct; the manner is neither too light, nor to grave; the dimensions neither too long, nor too fhort: they are fuch. in a word, as I fould like to receive from the daughter of my best friend. I attend your lively journal, through bad roads, and worfe inns. Your description of men and manners conveys very fatisfactory information; and I am particularly delighted with your remark concerning the irregular behaviour of the Rhine. But the Rhine, alas! after some temporary wanderings, will be content to flow in his old channel, while man - man is the greatest fool of the whole creation.

I direct this letter to Sheffield - Place, where I fuppofe you arrived in health and fafety. I congratulate my Lady on her quiet eftablifhment by her firefide; and hope you will be able, after all your excurfions, to fupport the climate and manners of Old England. Before this epifile reaches you, I hope to have received the two promifed letters from Dover and Sheffield Place. If they fhould not meet with a proper return, you will pity and forgive me. I have not yet heard from Lord Sheffield, who feems to have devolved on his daughter, the tafk which fhe has fo glorioufly executed.

I fhall probably not write to him, till I have received his first letter of bufiness from England; but with regard to my Lady, I have most excellent intentions.

I never could underftand how two perfons of fuch fuperior merit, as Mils Holroyd and Mils Laufanne, could have fo little relifh for one another, as they appeared to have in the beginning; and it was with great pleafure that I obferved the degrees of their growing intimacy, and the mutual regret of their separation. Whatever you may imagine, your friends at Laufanne have been thinking as frequently of yourfelf and company, as you could poffibly think of them; and you will be very ungrateful, if you do not ferioufly refolve to make them a fecond vifit, under fuch name and title as you may judge most agreeable. None of the Severy family, except perhaps my fecretary, are inclined to forget you; and I am continually afked for fome account of your health, motions, and amufements. Since your departure, no great events have occurred. I have made a fhort excursion to Geneva and Copet, and found Mr. Necker in much better fpirits than when you faw him. They preffed me to pafs fome weeks this winter in their houfe at Geneva; and I may poffibly comply, at leaft, in part, with their invitation. The afpect of Laufanne is peaceful and placid; and you have no hopes of a revolution driving me out of this country. We hear nothing of the proceedings of the commiffion ", except by playing at cards every evening with Monfieur Fifcher, who often speaks of Lord

Sheffield with efteem and refpect. There is no appearance of Roffet and La Motte being brought to a speedy trial, and they still remain in the castle of Chillon, which (according to the geography of the National Affembly) is washed by the fea. Our winter begins with great feverity; and we shall not probably have many balls, which, as you may imagine, I lament much. Angletine does not confider 'two French words as a letter. Montrond fighs and blufhes whenever Louifa's name is mentioned: Philippine wifhes to converfe with her on men and manners. The French ladies are fettled in town for the winter, and they form, with Mrs. Trevor, a very agreeable addition to our fociety. It is now enlivened by a vifit of the Chevalier de Boufflers, one of the most accomplished men in the ci-devant kingdom of France.

As Mrs. Wood", who has mifcarried, is about to leave us, I must either cure or die'; and, upon the whole, I believe the former will be most expedient. You will fee her in London, with dear Corea, next winter. My rival magnificently prefents me with a hogshead of Madeira; fo that in honor I could not supplant him: yet I do assure you, from my heart, that another departure is much more painful to me. The apartment below" is shut up, and I know not when I shall again visit it with pleasure. Adieu. Believe me, one and all, most affectionately yours.

EDWARD GIBBON Efg. to the Right Hon. Lord SHEFFIELD. LAUSANNE, December 28, 1791.

ALAS! alas! the dæmon of procrastination has again poffeffed me. Three months have nearly rolled away fince your departure; and feven letters, five from the most valuable Maria, and two from yourfelf, have extorted from me only a fingle epiftle, which perhaps would never have been written, had I not used the permiffion of employing my own tongue and the hand of a fecretary. Shall I tell you, that, for these last fix weeks, the eve of every day has witneffed a firm refolution, and the day itself has furnished fome ingenious delay? This morning, for inftance, I determined to invade you as foon as the breakfast things should be removed; but I had fomething to read, to write, to meditate, and there was time enough before me. Hour after hour has stolen away, and I finally begin my letter at two o'clock, evidently too late for the poft, as I must drefs, dine, go abroad, &c. A. foundation, however, shall be laid, which will ftare me in the face ; and next Saturday I shall probably be roufed by the awful reflection that it is the last day in the year.

After realizing this fummer an event which I had long confidered as a dream of fancy, I know not whether I fhould rejoice or grieve at your vifit to Laufanne. While I poffeffed the family, the fentiment of pleafure highly predominated; when, just as we had fubfided in a regular, eafy, comfort able plan of life, the last trump founded, and, without speaking of the pang of separation, you left me to one of the most gloomy, folitary months of October which I have ever paffed. For yourfelf and daughters, however, you have contrived to fnatch fome of the most interesting fcenes of this world. Paris, at fuch a moment, Switzerland, and the Rhine, Strafburgh, Coblentz, have fuggefted a train of lively images and ufeful ideas, which will not be fpeedily erafed. The mind of the young damfel, more efpecially, will be enlarged and enlightened in every fenfe. In four months the has lived many years; and the will much deceive and difpleafe me, if fhe does not review and methodize her journal, in fuch a manner as the is capable of performing, for the amufement of her particular friends. Another benefit which will redound from your recent view is, that every place, perfon, and object, about Laufanne, are now become familiar and interesting to you. In our future correspondence (do I dare pronounce the word correspondence?) I can talk to you as freely of every circumftance as if it were actually before your eyes. And fuft, of my own improvements. - All those venerable piles of ancient verdure which you admired. have been eradicated in one fatal day. Your faithful substitutes, William de Severy and Levade, have never ceafed to perfecute me, till I figned their death warrant. Their place is now fupplied by a number of picturesque naked poles, the foster-fathers of as many twigs of Platanuffes, which may afford a grateful but distant shade to the founder, or to his feris Nepotibus. In the mean while I must confefs that the terrace appears broader, and that I discover a much larger quantity of fnow than I should otherwife do. The workmen admire your ingenious plan for cutting out a new bedchamber and book - room; but, on mature confideration, we all unanimoufly prefer the old fcheme of adding a third room on the terrace beyond the library, with two fpacious windows, and a fire-place between. It will be larger (28 feet by 21), and pleafanter and warmer: the difference of expense will be much lefs confiderable than I imagined : the door of communication with the library will be artfully buried in the wainfcot; and, unlefs it be opened by my own choice, may always remain a profound fecret. Such is the defign; but, as it will not be executed before next fummer, you have time and liberty to fate your objections. I am much colder about the ftaircale, but it may be finished according to your idea, for thirty pounds; and I feel they will perfuade me. Am I not a very rich man? When thefe alterations are completed, few authors of fix yo. lumes in quarto will be more agreeably lodged than myfelf. Laufanne is now full and lively; all our native families are returned from the country ; and, praifed be the Lord! we are infefted with few foreigners, either French or English. Even our democrats are more reafonable or more difcreet; it is agreed, to wave the fubject of politics, and all feem happy and cordial. I have a grand dinner this week. a fupper of thirty or forty people on Twelfthday, &c.; fome concerts have taken place, fome balls are talked of; and even Maria would allow (yet it is ungenerous to fay even Maria) that the winter scene at Lausanne is tolerably gay and active. I fay nothing of the Severys, as Angletine has epiftolized Maria last post. She has probably hinted that her brother meditates a fhort excursion to Turin: that worthy fellow Trevor has given him a prefling invitation to his own houfe. In the beginning of February I propofe going to Geneva for three or four weeks. I fhall lodge and eat with the Neckers; my mornings will be my own, and I shall spend my evenings in the fociety of the place, where I have many acquaintance. This fort abfence will agitate my ftagnant life, and reftore me with fresh appetite to my house, my library, and my friends. Before that time (the end of February) what events may happen, or be ready to happen ! The National Affembly (compared to which the former was a fenate of heroes and demi - gods) feem refolved to attack Germany avec quatre millions de bayonettes libres; the army of the princes muft foon either fight, or ftarve, or conquer. Will Sweden draw his fword ? will Ruffia draw her purfe? an empty purfe! All is darknefs and anarchy: neither party is ftrong enough to oppofe a fettlement; and I cannot fee a poffibility of an amicable arrangement, where there are no heads (in any fenfe of the word) who can answer for the multitude. Send me your ideas, and those of Lord Guildford, Lord Loughborough, Fox, &c.

Before I conclude, a word of my vexatious affairs. — Shall I never fail on the fmooth ftream

(D)

of good fecurity and half-yearly intereft? will every body refuse my money? I had already written to Darrel and Gofling to obey your commands, and was in hopes that you had already made large and falutary evacuations. During your absence I never expected much effect from the cold indifference of agents; but you are now in England -you will be fpeedily in London: fet all your fetting - dogs to beat the field, hunt, inquire, why fhould you not advertife ? Yet I am almoft afhamed to complain of fome ftagnation of intereft, when I am witnefs to the natural and acquired philosophy of fo many French who are reduced from riches. not to indigence, but to abfolute want and beggary. A Count Argout has just left us, who poffeffed ten thousand a year in the island of St. Domingo; he is utterly burnt and ruined; and a brother, whom he tenderly loved, has been murdered by the negroes. Thefe are real misfortunes. I have much revolved the plan of the Memoirs I once mentioned; and, as you do not think it ridiculous, I believe I shall make an attempt : if I can please myself, 1 am confident of not displeasing ; but let this be a profound secret between us: people must not be prepared to laugh; they must be taken by furprife. Have you looked over your, or rather my, letters? Surely, in the courfe of the year, you may find a fafe and cheap occasion of fending me a parcel; they may affift me. Adieu. I embrace my Lady: fend me a favorable account of her health. I kifs the Marmaille. By an amazing pufh of remorfe and diligence I have finished VOL. I.

my letter (three pages and a half) this fame day fince dinner; but I have not time to read it. Ever yours.

Half paft Six.

To the Same.

LAUSANNE, December 31, 1791. To-morrow a new year, multos & felices ?

NOW most fincerely repent of my late repentance, and do almost fwear never to renounce the amiable and useful practice of procrastination. Had I delayed, as I was ftrongly tempted, another poft, your miffive of the 13th, which did not reach me till this morning (three mails were due), would have arrived in time, and I might have avoided this fecond Herculean labor. It will be, however, no more than an infant Hercules. The topics of conversation have been fully difcuffed, and I shall now confine myfelf to the needful of the new bufinefs. Felix faustumque fit ! may no untoward accident difarrange your Yorkshire mortgage; the - conclution of which will place me in a clear and eafy ftate, fuch as I have never known fince the first hour of property. * * * *

The three per cents are fo high, and the country is in fuch a damned flate of profperity under that fellow Pitt, that it goes against me to purchase at fuch low interest 1 n my visit to England next autumn, or in the foring following, (alas! you must acquiesce in the alternative.) I hope to be armed with fufficient materials to draw a fum, which may be employed as take or fancy shall dictate, in the improvement of my library, a fervice of plate, &c. I am not very fanguine, but furely this is no uncomfortable profpect. This pecuniary detail, which has not indeed been fo unpleafant as it used formerly to be, has carried me farther than I expected. Let us now drink and be merry. I flatter myfelf that your Madeira, improved by its travels, will fet forwards for Meffrs. Romberg, at Oftend, early in the fpring; and I fhould be very well pleafed if you could add a hogfhead of excellent Claret, for which we fhould be entitled to the drawback : they must halt at Basse, and fend notice to me for a fafeconduct. Have you had any intelligence from Lord Auckland about the wine which he was to order from Bourdeaux, by Marfeilles and the Rhone? The one need not impede the other; I with to have a large flock. Corea has promifed me a hoghead of his native Madeira, for which I am to give him an order on Cadell for a copy of the Decline and Fall: he vanished without notice, and is now at Paris. Could you not fifh out his direction by Mrs. Wood, who by this time is in England? I rejoice in Lally's profperity. Have you reconfidered my propofal of a declaration of conflictutional principles from the heads of the party ? I think a fool th addrefs from a body of Whigs to the National Affembly renders it still more incumbent on you. Achieve my worldly concerns, & eris mihi magnus Apollo. Adien. Ever vours.

$ 2

To the Same.

LAUSANNE, April 4th, 1792.

HOR fear vou should abuse me, as usual, I will begin the attack, and fcold at you, for not having yet fent me the long-expected intelligence of the completion of my mortgage. You had politively affured me that the fecond of February would terminate my wordly cares, by a confummation fo devoutly to be wilhed. The news, therefore, might reach me about the eighteenth; and I argued with the gentle logic of lazinefs, that it was perfectly idle to anfwer your letter, till I could chaunt a thank fgiving fong of gratitude and praife. As every post difappointed my hopes, the fame argument was repeated for the next; and twenty empty-handed poftilions have blown their infignificant horns, till I am provoked at laft to write by theer impatience and vexation. Facit indignatio verfum. Cofpetto di Baccho ; for I mult eafe myfelf by fwearing a little. What is the caufe, the meaning, the pretence, of this delay? Are the Yorkfbire mortgagers inconftant in their wifhes? Are the London lawyers conftant in their procraftination? Is a letter on the road, to inform me that all is concluded, or to tell me that all is broken to pieces? Had the money been placed in the three per cents laft May; befides the annual intereft, it would have gained by the rife of ftock nearly twenty per cent. Your Lordhip is a wife man, a fuccefsful writer, and an uleful fenator; von understand America and Ireland, corn and flaves, but your prejudice against the funds ", in which I am often tempted to join, makes you a little blind to their increasing value in the hands of our virtuous and excellent minister. But our regret is vain; one pull more and we reach the fhore; and our future correfpondence will be no longer tainted with bufinefs. Shall I then be more diligent and regular? I hope and believe fo; for now that I have got over this article of wordly interest, my letter feems to be almost finished. A propos of letters, am I not a fad dog to forget my Lady and Maria ? Alas! the dual number has been prejudicial to both. How happy could I be with either, were t'other dear charmer away. 1 am like the afs of famous memory : I cannot tell which way to turn first, and there I stand mute and immoveable. The Baronial and maternal dignity of my Lady, fupported by twenty years friendship, may claim the preference. But the five incomparable letters of Maria! - Next week, however. - Am I not alhamed to talk of next week?

I have moft fuccefsfully, and moft agreeably, executed my plan of fpending the month of March at Geneva, in the Necker-houfe, and every circumftance that I had arranged turned out beyond my expectation; the freedom of the morning, the fociety of the table and drawing-room, from half an hour paft two till fix or feven; an evening affembly and card party, in a round of the beft company, and, excepting one day in the week, a private fupper of free and friendly converfation. You would like Geneva better than Laufanne; there is much more information to be got among the men; but though

S 3

I found fome agreeable women, their manners and ftyle of life are, upon the whole, lefs eafy and pleafant than our own. I was much pleafed with Necker's brother Mr. De Germany, a good humored, polite, fenfible man, without the genius and fame of the flatefman, but much more adapted for private and ordinary happinels. Madame de Stael is expected in a few weeks at Copet, where they receive her, and where, "to dumb forgetfulnels a prey," the will have leifure to regret "the pleafing anxious being," which the enjoyed amidft the ftorms of Paris. But what can the poor creature do ? her hufband is in Sweden, her lover is no longer fecretary at war, and her father's houfe is the only place where the can refide with the least degree of prudence and decency. Of that father I have really a much higher idea than I ever had before; in our domestic intimacy he cast away his gloom and referve; I faw a great deal of his mind, and all that I faw is fair and worthy. He was overwhelmed by the hurricane, he miftook his way in the fog, but in fuch a perilous fituation, I much doubt whether any mortal could have feen or ftood. In the meanwhile, he is abufed by all parties, and none of the French in Geneva will fet their foot in his house. He remembers Lord Sheffield with efteem ; his health is good, and he would be tranquil in his private life, were not his fpirits continually wounded by the arrival of every letter and every newspaper. His fympathy is deeply interested by the fatal confequences of a revolution, in which he had acted fo leading a part; and he feels as a friend for the danger of M. de Leffart, who may be guilty in the eyes of the Jacobins, or even of his judges, by those very actions and dispatches which would be most approved by all the lovers of his country. What a momentous event is the Emperor's death! In the forms of a new reign, and of the Imperial election. the democrats have at least gained time, if they knew how to use it. But the new monarch, though of a weak complexion, is of a martial temper; he loves the foldiers, and is beloved by them; and the flow , fluctuating politics of his uncle may be fucceeded by a direct line of march to the gates of Strafburgh and Paris. It is the opinion of the mafter movers in France. (I know it most certainly,) that their troops will not fight, that the people have loft all fenfe of patriotifm, and that on the first discharge of an Austrian cannon the game is up. But what occasion for Austrians or Spaniards? the French are themfelves their greateft enemies; four thousand Marseillois are marched against Arles and Avignon, the troupes de ligne are divided between the two parties, and the flame of civil war will foon extend over the fouthern provinces. You have heard of the unworthy treatment of the Swifs regiment of Erneft. The cauton of Berne has bravely recalled them, with a ftout letter to the King of France, which must be inferted in all the papers. I now come to the most unpleafant article, our home politics. Boffet and La Motte are condemned to five-and-twenty years imprifonment in the fortrefs of Arbourg. We have not yet received their official fentence, nor is it believed that the proofs and proceedings againft them will be publifued; an awkward circumftance, which it does not feem eafy to justify. Some (though none of note) are taken up, feveral are fled, many more are fufpected and fuspicious. All are filent, but it is the filence of fear and difcontent; and the fecret hatred which rankled againft government begins to point against the few who are known to be well affected. I never knew any place fo much changed as Laufanne, even fince laft year; and though you will not be much obliged to me for the motive, I begin very ferioufly to think of vifiting Sheffield Place by the month of September next. Yet here again I am frightened, by the dangers of a French, and the difficulties of a German, route. You must fend me an account of the paffage from Dieppe to Brighton, with an itinerary of the Rhine, diftances, expenses, &c. As ufual, 1 just fave the post, nor have I time to read my letter, which, after walting the morning in deliberation, has been ftruck off in a heat fince dinner. No news of the Madeira. Your views of S. P. are just received; they are admired, and shall be framed. Severy has fpent the carnival at Turin. Trevor is only the beft man in the world.

S 4

To the Same.

LAUSANNE, May 30th, 1792.

A FTER the receipt of your penultimate, eight days ago, I expected, with much impatience, the arrival of your next-promifed epifile. It arrived this morning, but has not completely answered my expectations. I wanted, and I hoped for a full and fair pice ture of the prefent and probable afpect of your political world, with which, at this diftance, I feem every day lefs fatisfied. In the flave queftion vou triumphed last fession, in this you have been defeated What is the caufe of this alteration? If it proceeded only from an impulse of humanity, I cannot be difpleafed, even with an error : fince it is very likely that my own vote (had I poffeffed one) would have been added to the majority. But in this rage against flavery, in the numerous petitions against the flave trade, was there no leaven of new democratical principles? no wild ideas of the rights and natural equality of man? It is thefe, I fear. Some articles in newspapers, fome pamphlets of the year, the Jockey Club, have fallen into my hands. I do not infer much from fuch publications; yet I have never known them of fo black and malignant a caft. I fhuddered at Grey's motion ; difliked the halffupport of Fox, admired the firmnels of Pitt's declaration, and excufed the ufual intemperance of Burke. talents for mischief. I see a club of reform which contains fome refpectable names. Inform me of the professions, the principles, the plans, the refources. of these reformers. Will they heat the minds of the people ? Does the French democracy gain no ground? Will the bulk of your party ftand firm to their own intereft, and that of their country ? Will you not take fome active measures to declare your found opinions, and feparate yourfelves from your rotten members? If you allow them to perplex government, if you trifle with this folemn business, if you do not refift the spirit of innovation in the first attempt, if you admit the smallest and most specious change in our parliamentary fystem, you are lost. You will be driven from one ftep to another: from principles just in theory, to confequences most pernicious in practice; and your first concessions will be productive of every fublequent milchief, for which you will be answerable to your country and to posterity. Do not fuffer yourfelves to be lulled into a falle fecurity; remember the proud fabric of the French monarchy. Not four years ago it flood founded, as it might feem, on the rock of time. force, and opinion, supported by the triple ariftocracy of the church, the nobility, and the parliaments. They are crumbled into duft ; they are vanished from the earth. If this tremendous warning has no effect on the men of property in England; if it does not open every eye, and raife every arm, you will deferve your fate. If I am too precipitate, enlighten ; if I am too defponding, encourage me.

My pen has run into this argument; for, as much a foreigner as you think me, on this momentous fubject, I feel myfelf an Englifhman.

The pleafure of refiding at Sheffield-Place is, after all, the first and the ultimate object of my visit to my native country. But when or how will that visit be effected? Clouds and whirlwinds, Austrian Croats and Gallic cannibals, feem on every fide to impedemy passage. You seem to apprehend the perils or difficulties of the German road, and French peace is more fanguinary than civilized war. I must pass through, perhaps, a thousand republics or municipalities, which neither obly nor are obeyed. The ftrictnefs of paffports, and the popular ferment, are much increafed fince laft fummer: ariftocrate is in every mouth, lanterns hang in every ftreet, and a hafty word, or a cafual refemblance, may be fatal. Yet, on the other hand, it is probable that many Englifh, men, women, and children, will traverfe the country without any accident before next September; and I am fenfible that many things appear more formidable at a diftance than on a nearer approach. Without any abfolute determination, we muft fee what the events of the next three or four months will produce. In the mean while, I fhall expect with impatience your next letter: let it be fpeedy; my anfwer fhall be prompt.

You will be glad, or forry, to learn that my gloomy apprehenfions are much abated, and that my departure, whenever it takes place, will be an act of choice, rather than of necessity. I do not pretend to affirm, that fecret difcontent, dark fulpicion, private animofity, are very materially alfuaged; but we have not experienced, nor do we now apprehend, any dangerous acts of violence, which may compel me to feek a refuge among the friendly Bears ", and to abandon my library to the mercy of the democrats. The firmuels and vigor of government have crushed. at leaft for a time, the spirit of innovation ; and I do not believe that the body of the people, especially the peafants, are difposed for a revolution. From France, praifed be the dæmon of anarchy ! the infurgents of the Pays de Vaud could not at prefent have ' much to hope; and fhould the gardes nationales, of which there is little appearance, attempt an incurfion, the country is armed and prepared, and they would be refifted with equal numbers and fuperior difcipline. The Gallic wolves that prowled round Geneva are drawn away, fome to the fouth and fome to the north, and the late events in Flanders feem to have diffufed a general contempt, as well as abhorrence, for the lawlefs favages, who fly before the enemy, hang their prifoners, and murder their officers. The brave and patient regiment of Erneft is expected home every day, and as Berne will take them into prefent pay, that veteran and regular corps will add to the fecurity of our frontier.

I rejoice that we have fo little to fay on the fubject of worldly affairs. * * * * This fummer we are threatened with an inundation, befides many namelefs Englifh and Irifh; but I am anxious for the Duchefs of Devonfhire and the Lady Elizabeth Fofter, who are on their march. Lord Malmfbury, the audacieux Harris, will inform you that he has feen me: him I would have confented to keep.

One word more before we part; call upon Mr. John Nicholls, bookfeller and printer, at Cicero's Head, Red-Lion-Paffage, Fleet-Street, and afk him whether he did not, about the beginning of March, receive a very polite letter from Mr. Gibbon of Laufanne? To which, either as a man of bufinefs or a civil gentleman, he fhould have returned an anfwer. My application related to a domeftic article in the Gentleman's Magazine of Auguft 1788, (p. 698.) which had lately fallen into my hands, and concerning which I requefted fome farther lights. Mrs. Mofs delivered the letters " into my hands, but I doube whether they will be of much fervice to me; the work appears far more difficult in the execution than in the idea, and as I am now taking my leave for fometime of the library, I fhall not make much progress in the memoirs of P. P. till I am on English ground. But is it indeed true, that I thall eat any Suffex pheafants this autumn? The event is in the book of Fate, and I cannot unrol the leaves of September and October. Should I reach Sheffield-Place. I hope to find the whole family in a perfect flate of existence, except a certain Maria Holroyd, my fair and generous correspondent, whose annihilation on proper terms I most fervently defire. I must receive a copious answer before the end of next month. June, and again call upon you for a map of your political world. The chancellor roars; does he break his chain ? Vale,

To the Same.

LAUSANNE, August 23d, 1792.

WHEN I inform you, that the defign of my Englifh expedition is at laft poftponed till another year, you will not be much furprifed. The public obftacles, the danger of one road, and the difficulties of another, would alone be fufficient to arreft fo unwieldy and inactive a being; and thefe obftacles, on the fide of France, are growing every day more infuperable. On the other hand, the terrors which might have driven me from hence have, in a great meafore, fubfided; our ftate-prifoners are forgotten: the country begins to recover its old good humor and unfufpecting confidence, and the laft revolution of Paris appears to have convinced almost every body of the fatal confequences of democratical principles, which lead by a path of flowers into the abyfs of hell. I may therefore wait with patience and tranquillity till the Duke of Brunfwick fhall have opened the French road. But if I am not driven from Lau. fanne, you will alk, I hope with fome indignation, whether I am not drawn to England, and more especially to Sheffield-Place? The defire of embracing you and yours is now the ftrongeft, and muft gradually become the fole, inducement that can force me from my library and garden, over feas and mountains. The English world will forget and be forgotten, and every year will deprive me of fome acquaintance, who by courtefy are ftyled friends: Lord Guildford and Sir Jofhua Reynolds! two of the men, and two of the houses in London, on whom I the most relied for the comforts of fociety.

September 12th, 1792.

THUS far had I written in the full confidence of finishing and fendiog my letter the next post; but fix post days have unaccountably slipped away, and were you not accustomed to my filence, you would almost begin to think me on the road. How dreadfully, fince my last date, has the French road been polluted with blood! and what horrid fcenes may be acting at this moment, and may ftill be aggravated, till the Duke of Brunfwick is mafter of Paris! On every rational principle of calculation he must fucceed; yet fometimes, when my fpirits are low, I dread the blind efforts of mad and desperate multitudes fighting on their own ground. A few days or weeks must decide the military operations of this year, and perhaps for ever; but on the fairest supposition. I cannot look forwards to any firm fettlement, either of a legal or an abfolute government. I cannot pretend to give you any Paris news Should I inform you. as we believe, that Lally is fill among the cannibals. you would poffibly anfwer, that he is now fitting in the library at Sheffield. Madame de Stael, after miraculoufly escaping through pikes and poniards, has reached the caftle of Copet, where I fhall fee her before the end of the week. If any thing can provoke the King of Sardinia and the Swifs, it must be the foul destruction of his cousin Madame de Lamballe, and of their regiment of guards. An extraordinary council is fummoned at Berne, but resentment may be checked by prudence. In fpite of Maria's laughter, I applaud your moderation, and figh for a hearty union of all the fenfe and property of the country. The times require it; but your last political letter was a cordial to my fpirits. The Duchefs of D. rather diflikes a coalition: amiable creature! The Eliza (we call her Befs) is furious against you for not writing. We shall lofe them in a few days; but the motions of Befs and the Duchefs for Italy or England, are doubtful

Ladies Spencer and Duncannon certainly pafs the Alps. 1 live with them. Adieu. Since I do not appear in perfon, I feel the abfolute propriety of writing to my Lady and Maria; but there is far from the knowledge to the performance of a duty. Ever yours.

To the Same.

LAUSANNE, October 5th, 1792.

AS our English newspapers must have informed you of the invation of Savoy by the French, and as it is poffible that you may have fome trifling apprehenfions of my being killed and eaten by those cannibals, it has appeared to me that a fhort extraordinary difpatch might not be unacceptable on this occafion. It is indeed true, that about ten days ago the French army of the South, under the command of M. de Montesquieu, (if any French army can be faid to be under any command,) has entered Savoy, and poffeffed them lelves of Chamberry, Montmelian, and feveral other places. It has always been the practice of the King of Sardinia to abandon his transalpine dominions: but on this occasion the court of Turin appears to have been furprifed by the ftrange excentric motions of a democracy, which always acts from the paffion of the moment; and their inferior troops have retreated, with fome lofs and difgrace, into the paffes of the Alps. Mount Cenis is now impervious, and our English travellers who are bound for Italy, the Duchels of Devonshire, Ancaster, &c. will will be forced to explore a long circuitous road through the Tirol. But the Chablais is yet intact. nor can our telescopes difcover the tricolor banners on the other fide of the lake. Our accounts of the French numbers feem to vary from fifteen to thirty thousand men ; the regulars are few, but they are followed by a rabble rout, which must foon, however, melt away, as they will find no plunder, and fcanty fubfistence, in the poverty and barrennefs of Savoy. N. B. I have just feen a letter from Mr. de Montesquieu, who boafts that at his first entrance into Savoy he had only twelve battalions. Our intelligence is far from correct.

The magistrates of Geneva were alarmed by this dangerous neighbourhood, and more efpecially by the well-known animofity of an exited citizen. Claviere, who is one of the fix ministers of the French republic. It was carried by a finall majority in the General Council, to call in the fuccour of three thousand Swifs, which is flipulated by ancient treaty. The ftrongest reason or pretence of the minority, was founded on the danger of provoking the French, and they feem to have been justified by the event; fince the complaint of the French relident amounts to a declaration of war. The fortifications of Geneva are not contemptible, especially on the fide of Savoy; and it is much doubted whether Mr. de Montesquien is prepared for a regular fiege; but the malecon. tents are numerous within the walls, and I question whether the fpirit of the citizens will hold out T against a bombardment. In the mean while the diet has declared that the first cannon fired against Geneva will be confidered as an act of hoftility against the whole Helvetic body. Berne, as the nearest and most powerful canton, has taken the lead with great vigor and vigilance; the road is filled with the perpetual fucceffion of troops and artillery; and, if fome difaffection lurks in the towns, the peafants, efpecially the Germans, are inflamed with a ftrong defire of encountering the murderers of their countrymen. Mr. de Watteville, with whom you dined at my houfe laft year. refused to accept the command of the Swifs fuccour of Geneva, till it was made his first instruction that he fhould never, in any cafe, furrender himfelf prifoner of war.

VOL. L.

In this fituation, you may fuppofe that we have fome fears. I have great dependence, however, on the many chances in our favor, the valor of the Swifs, the return of the Piedmontefe with their Austrian allies, eight or ten thousand men from the Milanefe, a diversion from Spain, the great events (how flowly they proceed) on the fide of Paris, the inconstancy and want of discipline of the French, and the near approach of the winter feason. I am not nervous, but I will not be rafh. It will be painful to abandon my house and library ; but, if the danger fhould approach, I will retreat before it, first to Berne, and gradually to the North. Should I even be forced to take refuge in England (a violent measure fo late in the year), you would perhaps receive me as kindly as you do the French priefts—a noble act of hofpitality ! Could I have forefeen this ftorm, I would have been there fix weeks ago; but who can forefee the wild meafures of the favages of Gaul? We thought ourfelves perfectly out of the hurricane latitudes. Adieu. I am going to bed, and muft rife early to vifit the Neckers at Rolle, whither they have retired, from the frontier fituation of Copet. Severy is on horfeback, with his dragoons: his poor father is dangeroufly ill. It will be fhocking if it fhould be found neceffary to remove him. While we are in this very awkward crifis, I will write at leaft every week. Ever yours. Write inftantly, and remember all my commiffions.

To the Same.

WILL keep my promife of fending you a weekly journal of our troubles, that, when the piping times of peace are reftored, I may fleep in long and irreproachable filence : but I fhall ufe a fmaller paper, as our military exploits will feldom be fufficient to fill the ample fize of our Englifh quarto.

October 13, 1792.

Since my laft of the 6th, our attack is not more eminent, and our defence is most affuredly stronger, two very important circumstances, at a time when every day is leading us, though not fo fast as our impatience could wish, towards the unwarlike month of November; and we observe with pleafure that the troops of Mr. de Montesquieu, which are chiefly from the Southern Provinces, will not cheerfully entertain the rigor of an Alpine winter. The 7th inftant, Mr. de Chateauneuf, the French refident, took his leave with a haughty mandate. commanding the Genevois, as they valued their fafety and the friendship of the republic, to difmifs their Swifs allies, and to punish the magistrates who had traiteroufly propofed the calling in thefe foreign troops. It is precifely the fable of the wolves, who offered to make peace with the fheep, provided they would fend away their does, You know what became of the fheep. This demand appears to have kindled a just and general indignation, fince it announced an edict of profcription; and must lead to a democratical revolusion, which would probably renew the horrid fcenes of Paris and Avigon. A general affembly of the citizens was convened, the meffage was, read, fpeeches were made, oaths were taken, and it was refolved (with only three diffentient voices) to live and die in the defence of their country. The Genevois muster above three thousand wellarmed citizens; and the Swifs, who may eafily be increased (in a few hours) to an equal number. add fpirit to the timorous, and confidence to the well-affected : their arfenals are filled with arms. their magazines with ammunition, and their graparies with corn. But their fortifications are extenfive and imperfect, they are commanded from two adjacent hills; a French faction lurks in the city, the character of the Genevois is rather commercial than military, and their behaviour, lofty promife, and bafe furrender, in the year 1782, is fresh in our memories. In the mean while, 4000, French at the most are arrived in the neighbouring camp, nor is there yet any appearance of mortars or heavy artillery. Perhaps a haughty menace may be repelled by a firm countenance. If it were worth while talking of justice, what a fhameful attack of a feeble, unoffending state! On the news of their danger, all Switzerland, from Schaffbouse to the Pays de Vaud, has rifen in arms: and a French refident, who has paffed through the country, in his way from Ratifbon, declares his intention of informing and admonifhing the National Convention. About eleven thousand Bernois are already posted in the neighbourhood of Copet and Nyon; and new reinforcements of men, artillery, &c. arrive every day. Another army is drawn together to oppose Mr. de Ferrieres, on the fide of Bienne and the bifhopric of Bafle; and the Auftrians in Swabia would be eafily perfuaded to crofs the Rhine in our defence. But we are vet ignorant whether our fovereigns mean to wage an offenfive or defenfive war. If the latter, which is more likely, will the French begin the attack ? Should Genoa yield to fear or force, this country is open to an invation; and though our men are brave. we want generals; and I defpife the French much lefs than I did two months ago. It fhould feem that our hopes from the King of Sardinia and the Auftrians of Milan are faint and diftant; Spain fleeps; and the Duke of Brunfwick (amazement !) feems to have failed in his great project. For my T 2 part, till Geneva falls, I do not think of a retreat; but, at all events, I am provided with two ftrong horfes, and a hundred Louis in gold. Zurich would be probably my winter quarters, and the fociety of the Neckers would make any place agreeable. Their fituation is worfe than mine: I have no daughter ready to lie in; nor do I fear the French ariftocrats on the road. Adieu. Keep my letters; excufe contradictions and repetitions. The Duchefs of Devonfhire leaves us next week. Lady Elizabeth abhors you. Ever yours.

T 2

To the Same.

October 20, 1792.

DINCE my laft, our affairs take a more pacific turn; but I will not venture to affirm that our peace will be either fafe or honorable. Mr. de Montefquieu and three commiffioners of the convention, who are at Carrouge, have had frequent conferences with the magistrates of Geneva; feveral expresses have been dispatched to and from Paris, and every step of the negotiation is communicated to the deputies of Berne and Zurich. The French troops observe a very tolerable degree of order and discipline; and no act of hostility has yet been committed on the territory of Geneva.

October 27.

My usual temper very readily admitted the excuse, that it would be better to wait another week, till the final fettlement of our affairs. The treaty is figned between France and Geneva; and the ratification of the Convention is looked upon as affured, if any thing can be affured in that wild democracy. On condition that the Swifs garrifon. with the approbation of Berne and Zurich, be recalled before the first of December, it is ftipulated that the independence of Geneva shall be preferved inviolate; that Mr. de Montefquieu fhall immediately fend away his heavy artillery, and that no French troops fhall approach within ten leagues of the city. As the Swifs have acted only as auxiliaries, they have no occasion for a direct treaty: but they cannot prudently difarm, till they are fatisfied of the pacific intentions of France; and no fuch fatisfaction can be given till they have acknowledged the new republic, which they will probably do in a few days, with a deep groan of indignation and forrow ; it has been cemented with the blood of their countrymen ! But when the Emperor, the King of Pruffia, the first general. and the first army in Europe have failed, lefs powerful flates may acquiesce, without difhonor, in the determination of fortune. Do you understand this most unexpected failure? I will allow an ample fhare to the badnefs of the roads and the weather, to famine and difeafe, to the skill of Dumourier, a heaven-born general! and to the enthusiastic ardor of the new Romans; but still. ftill there must be fome fecret and shameful caufe at the bottom of this ftrange retreat. We are now delivered from the impending terrors of fiege and invalion. The Geneva émigrés, particularly the Neckers, are haftening to their homes; and I fhall not be reduced to the hard neceffity of feeking a winter afylum at Zurich or Conftance: but I am not pleafed with our future prospects. It is much to be feared that the prefent government of Geneva will be foon modelled after the French fashion; the new republic of Savoy is forming on the oppolite bank of the Lake; the Jacobin millionaries are powerful and zealous; and the malecontents of this country, who begin again to rear their heads, will be furrounded with temptations, and examples, and allies. I know not whether the Pays de Vaud will long adhere to the dominion of Berne; or whether I shall be permitted to end my days in this little paradife, which I have fo happily fuited to my tafte and circumstances.

T4

Last Monday only I received your letter, which had ftrangely loitered on the road fince its date of the 29th of September. There must furely be fome diforder in the posts, fince the Eliza departed indignant at never having heard from you.

The cafe of my wine I think peculiarly hard: to lofe my. Madeira, and to be foolded for lofing it. I am much indebted to Mr. Nichols for his genealogical communications, which I am impatient to receive; but I do not underftand why fo civil a gentleman could not favor me, in fix months, with an anfwer by the poft: fince he intrufts me with thefe valuable papers, you have not, I prefume, informed him of my negligence and awkwardnefs in regard to manufcripts. Your reproach rather furprifes me, as I fuppofe I am much the fame as I have been for thefe laft twenty years. Should you hold your refolution of writing only fuch things as may be publifhed at Charing Crofs, our future correfpondence would not be very interefting. But I expect and require, at this important crifis, a full and confidential account of your views concerning England, Ireland, and France. You have a ftrong and clear eye; and your pen is, perhaps, the moft ufeful quill that ever has been plucked from a goofe. Your protection of the French refugees is highly applauded. Roffet and La Motte have efcaped from Arbourg, perhaps with connivance to avoid difagreeable demands from the republic. Adieu. Ever yours.

To the Same.

November 10, 1792.

K ECEIVED this day, November oth, a moft amiable difpatch from the too humble fecretary ¹⁰ of the family of Efpée ¹⁰, dated October 24th, which I anfwer the fame day. It will be acknowledged, that I have fulfilled my engagements with as much accuracy as our uncertain ftate and the fragility of human nature would allow. I refume my narrative. At the time when we imagined that all was fettled, by an equal treaty between two fuch unequal powers, as the Geneva Flea and the Leviathan France, we were thunderftruck with the intelligence that the minifters of the republic refufed to ratify the conditions; and they were indignant, with fome color of reafon, at the hard obligation of withdrawing their troops to the distance of ten leagues, and of coolequently leaving the Pays de Gez naked, and exposed to the Swifs, who had affembled 15,000 men on the frontier, and with whom they had not made any agreement. The meffenger who was fent laft Sunday from Geneva is not yet returned; and many perfons are afraid of fome defign and danger in this delay. Montesquieu has acted with politeness, moderation, and apparent fincerity; but he may relign, he may be superseded, his place may be occupied by an enragé, by Servan, or Prince Charles of Heffe, who would afpire to imitate the predatory fame of Cuftine in Germany. In the mean while, the General holds a wolf by the ears; an officer who has feen his troops, about 18,000 men (with a tremendous train of artillery), reprefents them as a black, daring, defperate crew of buccaneers, rather fhocking than contemptible; the officers (fcarcely a gentleman among them), without fervants, or horfes, or baggage, lying higgledy piggledy on the ground with the common men, yet maintaining a rough kind of difcipline over them. They already begin to accuse and even to suspect their general, and call aloud for blood and plunder: could they have an opportunity of fqueezing fome of the rich citizens, Geneva would cut up as fat as most towns in Europe. During this fulpenfion of hostilities they are permitted to vifit the city without arms, fometimes three or four hundred at a time; and the magistrates, as well as the Swifs commander, are by no means pleafed with this dangerous intercourfe, which they dare not prohibit. Such are our fears: yet it fhould feem on the other fide, that the French affect a kind of magnanimous justice towards their little neighbour, and that they are not ambitious of an unprofitable conteft with the poor and hardy Swifs. The Swifs are not equal to a long and expensive war; and as most of our militia have families and trades, the country already fighs for their return. Whatever can be yielded, without absolute danger or difgrace, will doubtlefs be granted; and the bufinefs will probably end in our owning the fovereignty, and trufting to the good faith of the republic of France : how that word would have founded four years ago! The measure is humiliating ; but after the retreat of the Duke of Brunfwick. and the failure of the Auftrians, the fmaller powers may acquiesce without diffionor. Every dog has his day; and thefe Gallic dogs have their day, at leaft, of most infolent prosperity. After forcing or tempting the Pruffians to evacuate their country, they conquer Savoy, pillage Germany, threaten Spain: the Low Countries are now invaded; Rome and Italy tremble; they fcour the Mediterranean, and talk of fending a fquadron into the South Sea. The whole horizon is fo black, that I begin to feel fome anxiety for England, the laft refuge of liberty and law; and the more fo, as I perceive from Lord Sheffield's laft epiftle that his firm nerves are a little fhaken : but of this more in my next, for I want to unburden my confcience. If England, with the experience of our happinels and French calamities, fhould now be feduced to eat the apple of falfe freedom, we fhould indeed deferve to be driven from the paradife which we enjoy. I turn afide from the horrid and improbable (yet not impoffible) fuppofition, that, in three or four years' time, myfelf and my best friends may be reduced to the deplorable state of the French emigrants: they thought it as impoffible three or four years ago. Never did a revolution affect, to fuch a degree, the private existence of such numbers of the first people of a great country: your examples of mifery I could eafily match with fimilar examples in this country and the neighbourhood ; and our fympathy is the deeper, as we do not poffefs, like you, the means of alleviating, in fome degree, the misfortunes of the fugitives. But I must have, from the very excellent pen of the Maria, the tragedy of the Archbifhop of Arles; and the longer the better. Madame de Biron has probably been tempted by fome faint and (I fear) fallacious promifes of clemency to the women, and which have likewife engaged Madame d'Agueffeau and her two daughters to revisit France. Madame de Bouillon ftands her ground, and her fituation as a foreign princefs is lefs expofed. As Lord S. has affumed the glorious character of protector of the diftreffed, his name is pronounced with gratitude and refpect. The D. of Richmond is praifed, on Madame de Biron's account. To the Princefs d'Henin, and Lally, I with to be remembered. The Neckers cannot venture into Geneva, and Madame de Stael will probably lie in at Rolle. He is printing a defence of the King, &c. against their republican Judges; but the name of Necker is unpopular to all parties, and I much fear that the guillotine will be more fpeedy than the prefs. It will, however, be an eloquent performance; and, if I find an opportunity, I am to fend you one, to you Lord S. by his particular defire : he wifhes likewife to convey fome copies with fpeed to our principal people, Pitt, Fox, Lord Stormont, &c. But fuch is the rapid fucceffion of events, that it will appear like the Pouvoir Exécutif, his beft work, after the whole fcene has heen totally changed. Ever yours.

P. S. The revolution of France, and my triple difpatch by the fame post to Sheffield-Place, are, in my opinion, the two most fingular events in the eighteenth century. I found the task fo easy and pleafant, that I had fome thoughts of adding a letter to the gentle Louifa. I am this moment informed, that our troops on the frontier are beginning to move, on their return home; yet we hear nothing of the treaty's being concluded.

EDWARD GIBBON Efq. to the Hon Mifs HOLROYD.

LAUSANNE, Nov. 10, 1792.

N difpatching the weekly political journal to Lord S. my conficience (for I have fome remains of conficience) moft powerfully urges me to falute, with fome lines of friendfhip and gratitude, the amiable fecretary, who might fave herfelf the trouble of a modeft apology. I have not yet forgotten our different behaviour after the much lamented feparation of October the 4th. 1791, your meritorious punctuality, and my unworthy filence. I have ftill before me that entertaining narrative, which would have interefted me, not only in the progrefs of the cariffima familia, but in the motions of a Tartar camp, or the march of a caravan of Arabs; the mixture of juft obfervation and lively imagery, the firong fenfe of a man, expressed with the easy elegance of a female. I fill recollect with pleasure the happy comparison of the Rhine, who had heard fo much of liberty on both his banks, that he wandered with mischievous licentious for all the adjacent meadows ¹⁰⁴. The inundation, alas! has now spread much wider; and it is fadly to be feared that the Elbe, the Po, and the Danube, may imitate the vile example of the Rhine: I shall be content, however, if our own Thames shill preferves his fair character, of Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full.

These agreeable epiftles of Maria produced only fome dumb intentions, and fome barren remorfe; nor have I deigned, except by a brief miffive from my chancellor, to express how much I loved the author, and how much I was pleafed with the composition. That amiable author I have known and loved from the first dawning of her life and coquetry, to the prefent maturity of her talents; and as long as I remain on this planet, I shall purfue, with the fame tender and even anxious concern, the future fleps of her eftablifhment and life. That eftablifhment must be fplendid: that life must be happy. She is endowed with every gift of nature and fortune; but the advantage which fhe will derive from them, depends almost entirely on herfelf. You must not, you shall not, think yourfelf unworthy to write to any man: there is none whom your correspondence would not amuse and fafattisfy. I will not undertake a tafk, which my tafte would adopt, and my indolence would too foon relinquifh; but I am really curious, from the beft motives, to have a particular account of your own ftudies and daily occupation. What books do you read? and how do you employ your time and your pen? Except fome profeffed scholars, I have often observed that women in general read much more than men; but, for want of a plan, a method, a fixed object, their reading is of little benefit to themfelves, or others. If you will inform me of the fpecies of reading to which you have the most propensity, I shall be happy to contribute my fhare of advice or affiftance. I lament that you have not left me fome monument of your pencil. Lady Elizabeth Foster has executed a very pretty drawing, taken from the door of the green-houfe where we dined laft fummer, and including the poor Acacia (now recovered from the cruel fheers of the gardener), the end of the terrace, the front of the Pavilion, and a diftant view of the country, lake, and mountains. I am almost reconciled to d'Apples' houfe, which is nearly finished. Inftead of the monfters which Lord Hercules Sheffield extirpated, the terrace is already fhaded with the new acacias and plantanes; and although the uncertainty of poffeffion reftrains me from building, I myfelf have planted a bofquet at the bottom of the garden. with fuch admirable fkill that it affords fhade without intercepting profpect. The fociety of the aforefaid Eliza, commonly called Befs, of the Duchefs of D &c. has been very interesting; but they are now flown beyond the Alps, and pals the winter at Pifa. The Legards, who have long fince left this place, fhould be at prefent in Italy; but I believe Mrs. Grimftone and her daughter returned to England. The Levades are highly flattered by your remembrance. Since you still retain fome attachment to this delightful country, and it is indeed delightful, why fhould you defpair of feeing it once more? The happy peer or commoner, whole name you may affume, is ftill concealed in the book of fate; but, whofoever he may be, he will cheerfully obey your commands, of leading you from ---- Caftle to Laufanne, and from Laufanne to Rome and Naples. Before that event takes place, I may poffibly fee you in Suffex; and, whether as a vifitor or a fugitive, I hope to be welcomed with a friendly embrace. The delay of this year was truly painful, but it was inevitable; and individuals muft fubmit to those ftorms which have overturned the thrones of the earth. The tragic ftory of the Archbishop of Arles I have now fomewhat a better right to require at your hands. I with to have it in all its horrid details '*'; and as you are now fo much mingled with the French exiles, I am of opinion, that were you to keep a journal of all the authentic facts which they relate, it would be an agreeable exercife at prefent, and a future fource of entertainment and instruction.

I fhould be obliged to you, if you would make, or find, fome excufe for my not an fwering a letter from your aunt, which was prefented to me by Mr. Fowler. I fhowed him fome civilities, but he is now a poor invalid confined to his room. By her channel and yours I fhould be glad to have fome information of the health, fpirits, and fituation of Mrs. Gibbon of Bath, whofe alarms (if fhe has any) you may difpel. She is in my debt. Adieu; most truly yours.

of

EDWARD GIBBON Efq. to the Right Hon. Lady SHEFFIELD.

LAUSANNE, November 10th, 1792.

COULD never forgive myfelf, were I capable of writing by the fame poft, a political epiftle to the father, and a friendly letter to the daughter, without fending any token of remembrance to the respectable matron, my dearest Lady, whom I have now loved as a fifter for fomething better or worfe than twenty years. No, indeed, the historian may be carelefs, he may be indolent, he may always intend and never execute, but he is neither a monfter nor a statue; he has a memory, a confcience, a heart, and that heart is fincerely devoted to Lady S -.. He muft even acknowledge the fallacy of a fophifm which he has fometimes used, and the has always and most truly denied; that, where the perfons of a family are ftrictly united, the writing to one is in fact writing to all; and that confequently all his numerous letters to the hufband, may be confidered as equally addreffed to his wife. He feels, on the contrary, that feparate minds have their diftinct ideas and fentiments, and that each character, either in fpeaking or writing, has its peculiar tone of conversation. He agrees with the maxim of Rouffeau, that three friends who will to disclose a common fecret. VOL. I.

will impart it only deux à deux; and he is fatisfied that, on the prefent memorable occasion, each of the perfons of the Sheffield family will claim a peculiar share in this triple missive, which will communicate, however, a triple fatisfaction. The experience of what may be effected by vigorous refolution, encourages the historian to hope that he shall cast the skin of the old ferpent, and hereaster show himself as a new creature.

I lament, on all our accounts, that the last year's expedition to Laufanne did not take place in a golden period, of health and fpirits. But we muft reflect, that human felicity is feldom without alloy; and if we cannot indulge the hope of your making a fecond vifit to Laufanne, we must look forwards to my refidence next fummer at Sheffield-Place, where I must find you in the full bloom of health, fpirits, and beauty. I can perceive, by all public and private intelligence, that your house has been the open hofpitable afylum of French fugitives; and it is a fufficient proof of the firmnels of your nerves, that you have not been overwhelmed or agitated by fuch a concourse of ftrangers. Curiofity and compation may, in fome degree, have supported you. Every day has prefented to your view fome new fcene of that ftrange tragical romance, which occupies all Europe fo infinitely beyond any event that has happened in our time. and you have the fatisfaction of not being a mere spectator of the diftress of fo many victims of false liberty. The benevolent fame of Lord S. is widely diffused.

From Angletine's last letter to Maria, you have already fome idea of the melancholy flate of her poor father. As long as Mr. de Severy allowed our hopes and fears to fluctuate with the changes of his diforder, I was unwilling to fay any thing on fo painful a fubject; and it is with the deepeft concern that I now confess our absolute despair of his recovery. All his particular complaints are now loft in a general diffolution of the whole frame; every principle of life is exhaufted, and as often as I am admitted to his bed-fide, though he flill looks and fmiles with the patience of an angel, I have the heart felt grief of feeing him each day drawing nearer to the term of his existence. A few weeks, poffibly a few days, will deprive me of a most excellent friend, and break for ever the most perfect fystem of domestic happiness, in which I had fo large and intimate a fhare. Wilhelm (who has obtained leave of absence from his military duty) and his lifter behave and feel like tender and dutia ful children; but they have a long gay profpect of life, and new connexions, new families will make them forget, in due time, the common lot of mortality. But it is Madame de Severy whom I truly pity; I dread the effects of the first shock, and I dread fill more the deep perpetual confuming affliction for a lofs which can never be retrieved. You will not wonder that fuch reflections fadden my own mind, nor cau I forget how much my fituation is altered fince I retired, nine years ago, to the banks of the Leman Lake. The death of poor Deyverdun first deprived me of a domestic com-V 2

panion, who can never be fupplied; and your vific has only ferved to remind me that man, however amufed and occupied in his closet, was not made to live alone. Severy will foon be no more, his widow for a long time, perhaps for ever, will be loft to herfelf and her friends, the fon will travel. and I shall be left a stranger in the insipid circle of mere common acquaintance. The revolution of France, which first embittered and divided the fociety of Laufanne, has opposed a barrier to my Suffex vifit, and may finally expel me from the paradife which I inhabit. Even that paradife, the expensive and delightful establishment of my house. library, and garden, almost becomes, an incumbrance, by rendering it more difficult for me to relinquish my hold, or to form a new system of life in my native country, for which my income, though improved and improving, would be probably infufficient. But every complaint should be filenced by the contemplation of the French; compared with whofe cruel fate, all mifery is relative happinels. I perfectly concur in your partiality for Lally; though Nature might forget fome meaner ingredients, of prudence, economy, &c. fhe never formed a purer heart, or a brighter imagination. If he be with you, I beg my kindeft falutations to him. 1 am every day more clofely united with the Neckers. Should France break, and this country be over-run, they would be reduced, in very humble circumstances, to feek a refuge; and where but in England? Adieu, dear Madam, there is, indeed, much pleafure in difcharging one's heart to a real friend. Ever yours.

EDWARD GIBBON E/q. to the Right Hon. Lord SHEFFIELD.

[Send me a Lift of these Letters, with their respective dates.]

LAUSANNE, Nov. 25th, 1792.

AFTER the triple labor of my last dispatch. your experience of the creature might tempt you to fuspect that it would again relapse into a long flumber. But, partly from the fpirit of contradiction, (though I am not a lady, and partly from the cafe and pleafure which I now find in the talk. you fee me again alive, awake and almost faithful to my hebdomadal promife. The laft week has not, however, afforded any events deferving the notice of a hiftorian. Our affairs are still floating on the waves of the convention, and the ratification of a corrected treaty, which had been fixed for the twentieth, is not yet arrived; but the report of the diplomatic committee has been favorable, and it is generally understood that the leaders of the French republic do not with to quarrel with the Swifs. We are gradually withdrawing and difbanding our militia. Geneva will be left to fink or fwim, according to the humor of the people; and our laft hope appears to be, that by fubmiffion and good behaviour we fhall avert for fome time the impending ftorm. A few days ago an odd accident happened in the French army; the defertion of the general. As the Neckers were fitting, about V 3 eight o'clock in the evening, in their drawing-room at Rolle "" the door flew open, and they were altounded by their fervant's announcing Monfieur le Général de Montelquieu? On the receipt of some secret intelligence of a décret d'accufation, and an order to arreft him, he had only time to get on horfeback, to gal. lop through Geneva, to take boat for Copet, and to escape from his purfuers, who were ordered to feize him alive or dead. He left the Neckers after fupper, paffed through Laufanne in the night, and proceeded to Berne and Bafle, whence he intended to wind his way through Germany, amidft enemies of every defcription, and to feek a refuge in England, America, or the moon. He told Necker, that the fole remnant of his fortune confifted in a wretched fum of twenty thousand livres; but the public report, or fuspicion, bespeaks him in much better circumstances. Besides the reproach of acting with too much tamenefs and delay, he is accused of making very foul and exorbitant contracts; and it is certain that new Sparta is infected with this vice, beyond the example of the moft corrupt monarchy. Kellerman is arrived, to take the command; and it is apprehended that on the first of December, after the departure of the Swifs, the French may request the permission of using Geneva, a friendly city, for their winter-quarters. In that cafe, the democratical revolution, which we all forefee, will be very fpeedily effected.

I would afk you, whether you apprehend there was any treafon in the Duke of Brunfwick's retreat, and whether you have totally withdrawn your confidence and efteem from that once-famed general? Will it be poffible for England to preferve her neutrality with any honor or fafety? We are bound, as I understand, by treaty, to guarantee the dominions of the King of Sardinia and the Auftrian provinces of the Netherlands. These countries are now invaded and over-run by the French. Can we refuse to fulfil our engagements, without exposing ourfelves to all Europe as a perfidious or pufillanimous nation ? Yet, on the other hand, can we affift those allies, without plunging headlong into an abyfs, whofe bottom no man can difcover? But my chief anxiety is for our domeftic tranquillity; for I must find a retreat in England, should I be driven from Laufanne. The idea of firm and honorable union of parties pleases me much; but you must frankly unfold what are the great difficulties that may impede fo falutary a meafure : you write to a man difcreet in speech, and now careful of papers. Yet what can fuch a coalition avail ? Where is the champion of the conftitution ? Alas, Lord Guildford ! I am much pleafed with the Manchefter Afs. The affes or wolves who facrificed him have caft off the malk too foon; and fuch a nonfenfical act must open the eyes of many fimple patriots, who might have been led aftray by the specious name of reform. It should be made as notorious as poffible. Next winter may be the crifis of our fate, and if you begin to improve the conflicution, you may be driven ftep by ftep from the disfranchifement of old Sarum to the King in Newgate, the Lords voted ufelefs, the Bifhops abolifted, and a Houfe of Commons without articles (fans culottes). Necker has ordered you a copy of his toyal defence, which has met with, and deferved, uni-V4 verfal fuccefs. The pathetic and argumentative parts are, in my opinion, equally good, and his mild eloquence may perfuade without irritating. I have applied to this gentler tone fome verfes of Ovid, (Metamorph. 1. iii. 302, &c. ''') which you may read. Madame de Stael has produced a fecond fon. She talks wildly enough of vifiting England this winter. She is a pleafant little woman. Poor Severy's condition is hopelefs. Should he drag through the winter, Madame de S. would fcarcely furvive him. She kills herfelf with grief and fatigue, what a difference in Laufanne ! I hope triple anfwers are on the road. I muft write foon; the times will not allow me to read or think. Ever yours.

To the Same.

LAUSANNE, Dec. 14th, 1792.

Use little florm has now completely fubfided, and we are again fpectators, though anxious fpectators, of the general tempeft that invades or threatens almost every country of Europe. Our troops are every day disbanding and returning home, and the greatest part of the French have evacuated the neighbourhood of Geneva. Monsieur Barthelemy, whom you have seen sector in London, is most courteously entertained, as ambassadil or, by the Helvetic body. He is now at Berne, where a diet will speedily be convened; the language on both fides is now pacific, and even friendly, and some hopes are given of a provision for the officers of the Swifs guards who have furvived the massacres of Paris, January 1ft, 1793.

WITH the return of peace I have relapfed into my former indolence; but now awakening, after a fortnight's flumber, I have little or nothing to add, with regard to the internal flate of this country, only the revolution of Geneva has already taken place, as I announced, but fooner than I expected. The Swifs troops had no fooner evacuated the place, than the Egalifeurs, as they are called, affembled in arms; and as no refiftance was made, no blood was fhed on the occasion. They feized the gates, difarmed the garrifon, imprifoned the magistrates, imparted the rights of citizens to all the rabble of the town and country, and proclaimed a National Convention, which has not yet met. They are all for a pure and abfolute democracy; but fome with to remain a fmall independent ftate, whilft others afpire to become a part of the republic of France; and as the latter, though lefs numerous, are more violent and abfurd than their adverfaries, it is highly probable that they will fucceed. The citizens of the beft families and fortunes have retired from Geneva into the Pays de Vaud ; but the French methods of recalling or proferibing emigrants, will foon be adopted. You must have observed, that Savoy is now become le département du Mont Blanc. 1 cannot fatisfy myfelf. whether the mais of the people is pleafed or difpleafed with the change; but my noble fcenery is clouded by the democratical afpect of twelve leagues of the opposite coaft, which every morning obtrude themfelves on my view. I here conclude the first part of the hiftory of our Alpine troubles, and now confider myfelf as difengaged from all promifes of periodical writing. Upon the whole, I kept it beyond our expectation; nor do I think that you have been fufficiently aftonifhed by the wonderful effort of the triple difpatch.

You must now fucceed to my talk, and I shall expect, during the winter, a regular political journal of the events of your greater world. You are on the theatre, and may often be behind the fcenes. You can always fee, and may fometimes forefee. My own choice has indeed transported me into a foreign land; but I am truly attached, from interest and inclination, to my native country; and even as a citizen of the world, I wilh the ftability of England, the fole great refuge of mankind, against the opposite mifchiefs of defpotifin and democracy. I was indeed alarmed, and the more fo, as I faw that you were not without apprehension; but I now glory in the triumph of reafon and genuine patriotifm, which feems to pervade the country; nor do I diflike fome mixture of popular enthuliafm, which may be requifite to encounter our mad or wicked enemies with equal arms. The behaviour of Fox does not furprife me. You may remember what I told you last year at Laufanne, when you attempted his defence, that 2%   2/2

You have now crufhed the daring fubverters of the conflitution; but'I now fear the moderate wellmeaners, reformers. Do not, I befeech you, tamper with parliamentary reprefentation. The prefent house of commons forms, in practice, a body of gentlemen, who must always fympathize with the interefts and opinions of the people; and the flighteft innovation launches you, without rudder or compafs, on a dark and dangerous ocean of theoretical experiment. On this fubject I am indeed ferious.

Upon the whole, I like the beginning of ninetythree better than the end of ninety two. The illufion feems to break away throughout Europe. I think England and Switzerland are fafe. Brabant adheres to its old conftitution. The Germans are difgusted with the rapine and infolence of their deliverers. The Pope is refolved to head his armies, and the Lazzaroni of Naples have prefented St. Januarius with a gold fuzee, to fire on the Brigands François. So much for politics, which till now never had fuch poffeffion of my mind. Next post I will write about myself and my own defigns. Alas, your poor eyes! make the Maria write; I will speedily answer her. My Lady is fill dumb. The German pofts are now flow and irregular. You had better write by the way of France. under cover. Direct to Le Citoyen Rebours à Pontarlier, France. Adieu; ever yours.

To the Same.

LAUSANNE, January'6th, 1793.

HERE was formerly a time when our correspondence was a painful discussion of my private affairs; a vexatious repetition of loss, of disappointments, of fales, &c. These affairs are decently arranged: but public cares have now succeeded to private anxiety, and our whole attention is lately turned from Lenborough and Beriton, to the political flate of France and of Europe. From these politics, however, one letter shall be free, while I talk of myself and of my own plans; a subject most interesting to a friend, and only to a friend.

I know not whether I am forry or glad that my expedition has been postponed to the present year. It is true, that I now with myfelf in England, and almost repent that I did not grasp the opportunity when the obftacles were comparatively fmaller than they are now likely to prove. Yet had I reached you last fummer before the month of August, a confiderable portion of my time would be now elapfed, and I should already begin to think of my departure. If the gout fhould spare me this winter, (and as yet I have not felt any fymptom,) and if the fpring fhould make a foft and early appearance, it is my intention to be with you in Downing ftreet before the end of April, and thus to enjoy fix weeks or two months of the most agreeable feafon of London and the neighbourhood, after the hurry of parliament is fubfided, and before the great rural difperfion. As the banks of the Rhine and the Belgic provinces are completely overfpread with anarchy and war, I have made up my mind to pass through the territories of the French republic. From the best and most recent information. I am fatisfied that there is little or no real danger in the journey; and I must arm myself with patience to support the vexatious infolence of democratical tyranny. I have even a fort of curiofity to fpend some days at Paris, to affift at the debates of the Pandæmonium, to feek an introduction to the principal devils, and to contemplate a new form of public and private life, which never existed before, and which I devoutly hope will not long continue to exift. Should the obftacles of health or weather confine me at Laufanne till the month of May. I fhall fcarcely be able to refift the temptation of paffing fome part at least of the fummer in my own little paradife. But all these schemes must ultimately depend on the great queftion of peace and war, which will indeed be fpeedily determined. Should France become impervious to an English traveller, what must I do? I shall not easily refolve to explore my way through the unknown language and abominable roads of the interior parts of Germany, to embark in Holland, or perhaps at Hamburgh, and to be finally intercepted by a French privateer. My ftay in England appears not lefs doubtful than the means of tranfporting myfelf. Should I arrive in the fpring, it is poffible, and barely poffible, that I fhould return here in the autumn : it is much more probable that I fhall pass the winter, and there may be even a chance of my giving my own country a longer trial. In my letter to my Lady I fairly exposed the decline of Laufanne; but fuch an establishment as mine must not be lightly abandoned; nor can I discover what adequate mode of life my private circumstances, eafy as they now are, could afford me in England. London and Bath have doubtlefs their respective merits, and I could with to refide within a day's journey of Sheffield-Place. But a state of perfect happines is not to be found here below; and in the poffeffion of my library, houfe, and garden, with the relicks of our fociety, and a frequent intercourfe with the Neckers, I may fill be tolerably content. A mong the difaftrous changes of Laufanne, I muft principally reckon the approaching diffolution of poor Severy and his family. He is fill alive, but in fuch a hopelefs and painful decay, that we no longer conceal our wifhes for his fpeedy releafe. I never loved nor efteemed him fo much as in this laft mortal difeafe, which he fupports with a degree of energy, patience, and even cheeffulnefs, beyond all belief. His wife, whofe whole time and foul are devoted to him, is almoft finking under her long anxiety. The children are moft amiably affiduous to both their parents, and, at all events, his filial duties and worldly cares muft detain the fon fome time at home.

And now approach, and let me drop into your most private ear a literary fecret. Of the Memoirs little has been done, and with that little I am not fatisfied. They must be postponed till a mature feafon: and I much doubt whether the book and the Author can ever see the light at the same time But I have long refolved in my mind another fcheme of biographical writing : the Lives, or rather the Characters, of the moft eminent Perfons in Arts and Arms, in Church and State, who have flourished in Britain from the reign of Henry the Eighth to the prefent age. This work, extensive as it may be, would be an amufement, rather than a toil: the materials are acceffible in our own language, and, for the most part, ready to my hands : but the fubject, which would afford a rich difplay of human nature and domeftic hiftory, would powerfully address itfelf to the feelings of every Englishman. The tafte or falbion of the times feems to delight in picturefque decorations; and this feries of Britifh portraits might aptly be accompanied by the respective heads, taken from originals, and engraved by the beft mafters, Alderman Boydell, and his fon-in-law, Mr. George Nicol, bookfeller in Pallmall, are the great undertakers in this line. On my arrival in England I shall be free to confider, whether it may fuit me to proceed in a mere literary work without any other decorations than those which it may derive from the pen of the Author. It is a ferious truth, that I am no longer ambitious of fame or money ; that my habits of induftry are much impaired, and that I have reduced my fludies, to be the loofe amufement of my morning hours, the repetition of which will infenfibly lead me to the last term of existence. And for this very reafon I fhall not be forry to bind myfelf by a liberal engagement, from which I may not with honor recede.

Before I conclude, we mult fay a word or two of parliamentary and pecuniary concerns. 1. We all admire the generous fpirit with which you damned the affaffins . 1 hope that  The opinion of parliament in favor of Louis was declared in a manner worthy of the reprefentatives of a great and a wife nation. It will certainly have a powerful effect; and if the poor King be not already murdered, I am fatisfied that his life is in fafety: but is fuch a life worth his care? Our debates will now become every day more interefting; and as I expect from you only opinions and anecdotes; I most earneftly conjure you to fend me Woodfall's Register as often (and that must be very often) as the occasion deferves it. I now spare no expense for news.

I want fome account of Mrs. G.'s health. Will my Lady never write ? How can people be fo indolent ! I fuppofe this will find you at Sheffield - Place during the recefs, and that the heavy baggage will not move till after the birth - day. Shall I be with you by the first of May? The Gods only know. I almost wish that I had accompanied Madame de Stael. Ever yours.

To the Same.

Begun Feb. 9, - ended Feb. 18, 1793.

HE ftruggle is at length over, and poor de Severy is no more! He expired about ten days ago . after every vital principle had been exhaufted by a complication of diforders, which had lasted above five months : and a mortification in one of his legs, that gradually role to the more noble parts, was the immediate caufe of his death. His patience and even cheerfulnefs fupported him to the fatal moment: and he enjoyed every comfort that could alleviate his fituation, the skill of his physicians, the assiduous tendernefs of his family, and the kind fympathy not only of his particular friends, but even of common acquaintance, and generally of the whole town. The ftroke has been feverely felt: yet I have the fatisfaction to perceive that Madame de Severy's health is not affected; and we may hope that in time the will recover recover a tolerable fhare of composure and happines. Her firmnels has checked the violent fallies of grief : her gentlenels has preferved her from the worft of fymptoms, a dry, filent defpair. She loves to talk of her irreparable lofs, the defcants with pleafure on his virtues; her words are interrupted with tears. but those tears are her best relief; and her tender feelings will infenfibly fublide into an affectionate remembrance. Wilhelm is much more deep'y wounded than I could imagine, or than he expected himfelf: nor have I ever feen the affliction of a fon more lively and fincere. Severy was indeed a very valuable man : without any fhining qualifications, he was endowed in a high degree with good fenfe, honor, and benevolence; and few men have filled with more propriety their circle in private life. For myfelf, I have had the misfortune of knowing him too late, and of lofing him too foon. - But enough of this melan. choly fubject.

5

The affairs of this theatre, which muft always be minute, are now grown fo tame and tranquil, that they no longer deferve the hiftorian's pen. The new conflitution of Geneva is flowly forming, without much noife or any bloodfhed; and the patriots, who have flaid in hopes of guiding and reftraining the multitude, flatter themfelves that they fhall be able at leaft to prevent their mad countrymen from giving themfelves to the French, the only mifchief that would be abfolutely irretrievable. The revolution of Geneva is of lefs confequence to us, however, than that of Savoy; but our fate will depend on the general event, rather than on these particular causes. In the mean while we hope to be quiet spectators of the struggle of this year; and we feem to have affurances that both the Emperor and the French will compound for the neutrality of the Swifs. The Helvetic body does not acknowledge the republic of France; but Barthelemy, their ambaffador, refides at Baden, and fteals, like Chauvelin, into a kind of extraofficial negotiation. All fpirit of oppofition is quelled in the Canton of Berne, and the perpetual banifhment of the * * family has fcarcely excited a murmur. It will probably be followed by that of * * * * * : the crime alledged in their fentence is the having affifted at the federation-dinner at Rolle two years ago; and as they are abfent, I could almost with that they had been fummoned to appear, and heard in their own defence. To the general fupineness of the inhabitants of Laufanne I must abfcribe, that the death of Louis the Sixteenth has been received with lefs horror and indignation than I could have wifhed. I was much tempted to go into mourning, and probably fhould, had the Duchefs been ftill here; but, as the only Englishman of any mark, I was afraid of being fingular; more efpecially as our French emigrants, either from prudence or poverty, do not wear black, nor do even the Neckers. Have you read his difcourfe for the King? It might indeed fuperfede the neceffity of mourning. I fhould judge from your last letter, and from the diary, that the French declaration of war must have rather furprifed you. I wifh, although I know not how it could have been avoided, that we might ftill have continued to enjoy our fafe and profperous neutrality. You will not doubt my beft wifhes for the destruction of the milcreants; but I love England ftill more than I hate France. All reafonable chances are in favor of a confederacy. fuch as was never opposed to the ambition of Louis the Fourteenth; but, after the experience of laft year, I diftruft reason, and confess myself fearful for the event. The French are ftrong in numbers, activity, enthufiafm; they are rich in rapine; and, although their ftrength may be only that of a phrenzy fever, they may do infinite mifchief to their neighbours before they can be reduced to a firait waiftcoat. I dread the effects that may be produced on the minds of the people by the increase of debt and taxes, probable loffes, and poffible milmanagement. Our trade must fuffer ; and though projects of invasion have been always abortive, I cannot forget that the fleets and armies of Europe have failed before the towns in America, which have been taken and plundered by a handful of Buccaneers. I know nothing of Pitt as a war minister; but it affords me much fatisfaction that the intrepid wildom of the new chancellor "" is introduced into the cabinet. I wifh, not merely on your own account, that you were placed in an active, ufeful flation in government. I should not diflike you fecretary at war.

VOL. I.

5

I have little more to fay of myfelf, or of my journey to England: you know my intentions, and the great events of Europe must determine whether they can be carried into execution this fummer. If  has warmly adopted your idea, I shall speedily hear from him; but, in truth, I know not what will be my anfwer: I fee difficulties which at first did not occur: I doubt my own perfeverance, and my fancy begins to wander into new paths. The amufement of reading and thinking may perhaps fatisfy a man who has paid his debt to the public; and there is more pleafure in building caftles in the air than on the ground. I fhall contrive fome fmall affiftance for your correfpondent, though I cannot learn any thing that diftinguishes him from many of his countrymen; we have had our full fhare of poor emigrants : but if you with that any thing extraordinary thould be done for this man, you must send me a measure. Adieu. I embrace my Lady and Maria, as alfo Louifa, if with you. Perhaps I may foon write, without expecting an anfwer. Ever yours.

X 2

To the Same.

LAUSANNE, April 27, 1793.

My dearest Friend, for fuch you most truly are, nor does there exist a perfon who obtains, or shall ever obtain, a superior place in my esteem and affection.

After too long a filence I was fitting down to write, when, only yesterday morning (fuch is now the irregular flowness of the English post), I was fuddenly ftruck, indeed ftruck to the heart, by the fatal intelligence ¹⁰⁰ from Sir Henry Clinton and Mr. de Lally. Alas! what is life, and what are our hopes and projects! When I embraced her at your departure from Laufanne, could I imagine that it was for the last time ? when I postponed to another fummer my journey to England, could I apprehend that I never, never fhould fee her again? I always hoped that the would fpin her feeble thread to a long duration, and that her delicate frame would furvive (as is often the cafe) many constitutions of a stouter appearance. In four days! in your absence, in that of her children ! But fhe is now at reft; and if there be a future life, her mild virtues have furely entitled her to the reward of pure and perfect felicity. It is for you that I feel, and I can judge of your fentiments by comparing them with my own. I have loft, it is true, an amiable and affectionate friend, whom I had known and loved above three and twenty years, and whom l often ftyled by the endearing name of fifter. But you are deprived of the companion of your life, the wife of your choice, and the mother of your children; poor children ! the livelinefs of Maria, and the foftnefs of Louifa, render them almost equally the objects of my tendereft compaffion. I do not wifh to aggravate your grief; but, in the fincerity of friendship, I cannot hold a different language. I know the impotence of reason, and I much fear that the ftrength of your character will ferve to make a fharper and more lafting impreffion.

The only confolation in thefe melancholy trials to which human life is exposed, the only one at leaft in which I have any confidence, is the prefence of a real friend; and of that, as far as it depends on myfelf, you fhall not be defitute. I regret the few days that must be lost in fome necessary preparations; but I truft that to - morrow fe'nnight (May the fifth) I fhall be able to fet forwards on my journey to England; and when this letter reaches you. I shall be confiderably advanced on my way. As it is yet prudent to keep at a respectful distance from the banks of the French Rhine, I shall incline a little to the right, and proceed by Schaffhouse and Stutgard to Frankfort and Cologne : the Auftrian Netherlands are now open and fafe, and I am fure of being able at least to pais from Oftend to Dover; whence, without paffing through London, I thall purfue the direct road to Sheffield-Place. Unlefs I fhould meet with fome unforefeen accidents and delays, I hope. before the end of the month to fhare your folitude, and fympathize with your grief. All the difficulties of the journey, which my indolence had probably magnified, have now difappeared before a ftronger paffion; and you will not be forry to hear, that, as far as Frankfort to Cologne, I shall enjoy the advantage of the fociety, the conversation, the German language, and the active affiftance of Severy. His attachment to me is the fole motive which prompts him to undertake this troublefome journey; and as foon as he has feen me over the roughest ground. he will immediately return to Laufanne. The poor young man loved Lady S. as a mother, and the whole family is deeply affected by an event which reminds them too painfully of their own misfortune. Adieu. I could write volumes, and fhall therefore break off abruptly. I fhall write on the road, and hope to find a few lines poste restante at Frankfort and Bruffels. Adieu: ever vours.

X 3

To the Same.

MY DEAR FRIEND.

LAUSANNE, May 1793.

MUST write a few lines before my departure, though indeed I fcarcely know what to fay. Nearly a fortnight has now elapfed fince the first melancholy tidings, without my having received the flighteft fubfequent accounts of your health and fituation. Your own filence announces too forcibly how much you are involved in your feelings; and I can but too eafily conceive that a letter to me would be more painful than to an indifferent perfon. But that amiable man Count Lally might furely have written a fecond time; but your fifter, who is probably with vou; but Maria! - alas! poor Maria! I am left in a flate of darkness to the workings of my own fancy, which imagines every thing that is fad and fhocking. What can I think of for your relief and comfort? I will not expatiate on those commonplace topics, which have never dried a fingle tear; but let me advife, let me urge you to force yourfelf into bufinels, as I would try to force myfelf into ftudy. The mind muft not be idle ; if it be not exercifed on external objects, it will prey on its own vitals. A thousand little arrangements, which muft precede a long journey, have postponed my departure three or four days beyond the term which I had first appointed; but all is now in order, and I fet off to - morrow, the ninth inftant, with my valet de chambre, a courier on horfeback, and Severy, with his fervant, as far as Frankfort. I calculate my arrival at Sheffield-Place (how I dread and defire to fee that manfion!) for the firft week in June, foon after this letter; but I will try to fend you fome later intelligence. I never found myfelf ftronger, or in better health. The German road is now cleared, both of enemies and allies, and though I muft expect fatigue. I have not any apprehentions of danger. It is foarcely poffible that you fhould meet me at Frankfort, but I thall be much difappointed at not finding a line at Bruffels or Oftend. Adieu. If there be any invifible guardians, may they watch over you and yours! Adieu.

X4

To the Same.

FRANKFORT , May 19th , 1793-

A ND here I am in good health and fpirits, after one of the eafieft, fafeft, and pleafanteft journies which I ever performed in my whole life; not the appearance of an enemy, and hardly the appearance of a war. Yet I hear, as I am writing, the cannon of the fiege of Mayence, at the diftance of twenty miles; and long, very long, will it be heard. It is confeffed on all fides', that the French fight with a courage worthy of a better caufe. The town of Mayence is ftrong, their artillery admirable; they are already reduced to horfe-flefth, but they have ftill the refource of eating the inhabitants, and at laft of eating one another; and, if that repaft could be extended to Paris and the whole country, it might effentially contribute to the relief of mankind. Our operations are carried on with more than German flownefs, and when the belieged are quiet, the beliegers are perfectly fatisfied with their progrefs. A fpirit of division undoubtedly prevails; and the character of the Pruffians for courage and difcipline is funk lower than you can poffibly imagine. Their glory has expired with Frederick. I am forry to have miffed Lord Flgin, who is beyond the Rhine with the King of Pruffia. As I am impatient, I propofe fetting forwards to-morrow afternoon, and fhall reach Oftend in lefs than eight days. The paffage mult depend on winds and packets; and I hope to find at Bruffels or Dover a letter which will direct me to Sheffield-Place or Downing-Street. Severy goes back from hence. Adien : I embrace the dear girls. Ever yours.

To the Same.

BRUSSELS, May 27th, 1793.

HIS day, between two and three o'clock in the afternoon, I am arrived at this place in excellent prefervation. My expedition, which is now drawing to a clofe, has been a journey of perfeverance rather than fpeed, of fome labor fince Frankfort, but without the fmalleft degree of difficulty or danger As I have every morning been feated in the chaife foon after fun-rife, I propofe indulging to-morrow till eleven o'clock, and going that day no farther than Ghent. On Wednefday the 29th inftant I fhall reach Oftend in good time, juft eight days, according to my former reckoning, from Frankfort. Beyond that

I can fay nothing positive; but should the winds be propitious, it is possible that I may appear next Saturday, June first, in Downing Street. After that earliest date, you will expect me day by day till I arrive. Adieu. I embrace the dear girls, and falute Mrs. Holroyd I rejoice that you have anticipated my advice by plunging into business; but I should now be forry if that business, however important, detained us long in town. I do not wish to make a public exhibition, and only figh to enjoy you and the precious remnant in the folitude of Sheffield-Place. Ever yours.

If I am fuccefsful I may outftrip or accompany this letter. Your's and Maria's waited for me here, and over-paid the journey. HE preceding Letters intimate that, in return for my vifit to Laufanne in 1791, Mr. Gibbon engaged to pafs a year with me in England; that the war having rendered travelling exceedingly inconvenient, efpecially to a perfon who, from his bodily infirmities, required every accommodation, prevented his undertaking fo formidable a journey at the time he propofed.

The call of friendship, however, was sufficient to make him overlook every perfonal confideration . when he thought his prefence might prove a confolation. I must ever regard it as the most endearing proof of his fenfibility, and of his poffeffing the true fpirit of friendship, that after having relinquished the thought of his intended vifit, he haftened to England, in fpite of increasing impediments, to foothe me by the most generous sympathy, and to alleviate my domeftic affliction ; neither his great corpulency, nor his extraordinary bodily infirmities, nor any other confideration, could prevent him a moment from refolving on an undertaking that might have deterred the most active young man. He, almost immediately, with alertness by no means natural to him, undertook a great circuitous journey, along the frontiers of an enemy, worfe than favage, within the found of their cannon, within the range of the light troops of the different armies, and through roads ruined by the enormous machinery of war.

The readinefs with which he engaged in this kind office of friendship, at a time when a felfish spirit might have pleaded a thouland reafons for declining fo hazardous a journey, confpired, with the peculiar charms of his fociety to render his arrival a cordial to my mind. I had the fatisfaction of finding that his own delicate and precarious health had not fuffered in the fervice of his friend, a fervice in which he difregarded his own perfonal infirmities. He arrived in the beginning of June at my houfe in Downing Street, fafe and in good dealth; and after we had paffed about a month together in London, we fettled at Sheffield-Place for the fummer; where his wit, learning, and cheerful politenefs delighted a great variety of characters.

Although he was inclined to reprefent his health as better than it really was, his habitual diflike to motion appeared to increafe; his inaptnefs to exercife confined him to the library and dining-room, and there he joined my friend Mr. Frederick North, in pleafant arguments against exercise in general. He ridiculed the unfettled and reftlefs disposition that fummer, the most uncomfortable, as he faid, of all feasons, generally gives to those who have the free use of their limbs. Such arguments were little required to keep fociety within doors, when his company was only there to be enjoyed; for neither the fineness of the feason, nor the most promising parties of pleasure, could tempt the company of either fex to defert him.

Those who have enjoyed the fociety of Mr. Gibbon will agree with me, that his conversation was fill more captivating than his writings. Perhaps no man ever divided time more fairly between literary labor and focial enjoyment; and hence, probably, he derived his peculiar excellence of making his very extenfive knowledge contribute, in the higheft degree, to the ufe or pleafure of thofe with whom he converfed. He united, in the happieft manner imaginable, two characters which are not often found in the fame perfon, the profound fcholar and the fafcinating companion.

It would be fuperfluous to attempt a very minute delineation of a character which is fo diffinctly marked in the Memoirs and Letters. He has defcribed himfelf without referve, and with perfect fincerity. The Letters, and efpecially the extracts from the Journal, which could not have been written with any purpofe of being feen, will make the reader perfectly acquainted with the man.

Excepting a vifit to Lord Egremont and Mr. Hayley, whom he very particularly efteemed, Mr Gibbon was not abfent from Sheffield-Place till the beginning of October, when we were reluctantly obliged to part with him, that he might perform his engagement to Mrs. Gibbon at Bath, the widow of his father, who had early deferved, and invariably retained, his affection. From Bath he proceeded to Lord Spenfer's at Althorp, a family which he always met with uncommon fatisfaction. He continued in good health during the whole fummer, and in excellent fpirits (I never knew him enjoy better); and when he went from Sheffield-Place, little did I imagine it would be the laft time I fhould have the inexpreffible pleafure of feeing him there in full poffeffion of health.

The few following fhort letters, though not important in themfelves, will fill up this part of the narrative better, and more agreeably, than any thing I can fubfitute in their place.

EDWARD GIBEON Efq. to the Right Hon. Lord SHEFFIELD.

October 2d, 1793:

HE Cork-Street hotel has answered its recommendation; it is clean, convenient, and quiet. My first evening was paffed at home in a very agreeable tête-a-tête with my friend Elmfley. Yesterday I dined at Craufurd's with an excellent fet, in which were Pelham and Lord Egremont. I dine to-day with my Portuguese friend, Madame de Sylva, at Grenier's; most probably with Lady Webster, whom I met last night at Devonshire-House; a constant, though late, refort of fociety. The Duchefs is as good, and Lady Elizabeth as feducing, as ever. No news what foever. You will fee in the papers Lord Harvey's memorial. I love vigor, but it is furely a ftrong measure to tell a gentleman you have refolved to pais the winter in his houfe. London is not difagreeable; yet I shall probably leave it Saturday. If any thing fhould occur, I will write. Adieu; ever yours.

To the Same.

SUNDAY afternoon I left London and lay at Reading, and Monday in very good time I reached this place, after a very pleafant airing; and am always fo much delighted and improved, with this union of eafe and motion, that, were not the expense enormous,

I would travel every year fome hundred miles. more efpecially in England. I paffed the day with Mrs. G. yesterday. In mind and conversation she is just the fame as twenty years ago. She has fpirits, appetite, legs, and eyes, and talks of living till ninety "". I can fay from my heart, Amen. We dine at two. and remain together till nine; but, although we have much to fay, I am not forry that the talks of introducing a third or fourth actor. Lord Spenfer expects me about the 20th; but if I can do it without offence. I shall steal away two or three days sooner, and you fhall have advice of my motions. The troubles of Briftol have been ferious and bloody. I know not who was in fault; but I do not like appealing the mob by the extinction of the toll, and the removal of the Hereford miluia, who had done their duty. Adieu. The girls must dance at Tunbridgre. What would dear little aunt fay if I was to answer her letter? Ever yours, &c.

YORK-HOUSE, BATH,

October 9th, 1793.

I still follow-the old style, though the Convention has abolished the Christian era, with months, weeks, days, &c.

To the Same.

YORK-HOUSE, BATH, October 13th, 1793.

AM as ignorant of Bath in general as if I were ftill at Sheffield. My impatience to get away makes me think it better to devote my whole time to Mrs. G. ;

and dear little aunt, whom I tenderly falute, will excufe me to her two friends, Mrs. Hartley and Prefton, if I make little or no use of her kind introduction. A têle-à-lêle of eight or nine hours every day is rather difficult to fupport; yet I do affure you, that our conversation flows with more ease and spirit when we are alone, than when any auxiliaries are fummoned to our aid. She is indeed a wonderful woman. and I think all her faculties of the mind ftronger, and more active, than I have ever known them. I have fettled, that ten full days may be fufficient for all the purposes of our interview. I should therefore depart next Friday. the eighteenth inftant, and am indeed expected at Althorpe on the twentieth; but I may poffibly reckon without my hoft, as I have not yet apprized Mrs. G. of the term of my vifit; and will certainly not quarrel with her for a fhort delay. Adieu. I must have fome political speculations. The campaign, at least on our fide, seems to be at an end. Ever yours.

To the Same,

ALTHORP LIBRARY, Tuefday, four o'clock.

WE have fo completely exhaufted this morning among the firft editions of Cicero, that I can mention only my departure hence to morrow, the fixth inftant. I fhall he quietly at Woburn, and reach London in good time Thurfday. By the following poft I will write fomewhat more largely. My ftay in London will depend, partly on my amufement, and your being fixed at Sheffield-Place; unlefs you think I can be be comfortably arranged for a week or two with you at Brighton. The military remarks feem good; but now to what purpofe ? Adieu. I embrace and much rejoice in Louifa's improvement. Lord Offory was from home at Farning-Woods.

To the Same.

LONDON, Friday, Nov. 2th, four o'clock.

WALPOLE has just delivered yours, and I hasten the direction, that you may not be at a lofs. I will write to-morrow, but I am now fatigued, and rather unwell. Adieu. I have not feen a foul except Elmfley.

To the Same.

ST. JAMES'S-STREET, Nov. 9th, 1793.

AS I dropt yesterday the word unwell, I flatter myfelf that the family would have been a little alarmed by my filence to-day. I am ftill awkward, though without any fuspicions of gout, and have some idea of having recourfe to medical advice. Yet I creep out to-day in a chair, to dine with Lord Lucan. But as it will be literally my first going down stairs, and as fcarcely any one is apprized of my arrival, I know nothing, I have heard nothing, I have nothing to fay. My prefent lodging, a houfe of Elmfley's, is cheerful, convenient, fomewhat dear, but not fo much as a hotel, a species of habitation for which I have not conceived any great affection. Had you been Rationary at Sheffield, you would have feen me before the twen-Y

VOL. I.

tieth; for I am tired of rambling, and pant for my home; that is to fay, for your houfe But whether I shall have courage to brave * * * * and a bleak down, time only can difcover. Adieu. I wish you back to Sheffield Place. The health of dear Louisa is doubtless the first object; but I did not expect Brighton after Tunbridge. Whenever dear little aunt is separate from you, I shall certainly write to her; but at prefent how is it possible? Ever yours.

To the Same, at Brighthelmftone.

ST. JAMES'S-STREET, Nov. 11th, 1793.

I MUST at length withdraw the veil before my flate of health, though the naked truth may alarm you more than a fit of the gout. Have you never observed, through my inexpreffibles, a large prominency circa genitalia, which, as it was not at all painful, and very little troublefome, I had ftrangely neglected for many years? But fince my departure from Sheffield Place it has increased, (most supendously.) is increasing, and ought to be diminished. Yesterday I fent for Farquhar. who is allowed to be a very fkilful furgeon. After viewing and palping, he very ferioufly defired to call in affistance, and has examined it again to day with Mr. Cline, a furgeon, as he fays, of the first eminence. They both pronounce it a hydrocele, (a collection of water,) which must be let out by the operation of tapping; but, from its magnitude and long neglect. they think it a most extraordinary cafe, and with to have another lurgeon. Dr Bayley, prefent. If the bufinefs fhould go off imoothly, I fhall be delivered from my burden, (it is almost as big as a fmall child.) and walk about in four or five days with a trufs. But the medical gentlemen, who never fpeak quite plain, infinuate to me the poffibility of an inflammation, of fever, &c. I am not appalled at the thoughts of the operation, which is fixed for Wednefday next, twelve o'clock ; but it has occurred to me, that you might with to be prefent, before and afterwards, till the crifis was paft; and to give you that opportunity, I shall folicit a delay till Thurfday, or even Friday. In the mean while, I crawl about with fome labor, and much indecency, to Devonshire House (where I left all the fine Ladies making flannel wailtcoats); Lady Lucan's, &c. Adieu. Varnish the busness for the Ladies; yet lam afraid it will be public;- the advantage of being notorious. Ever yours.

adeles and Constent cleared breefing pictary

R. S. Standard Hill Carl and The Mill State and the second

art office and the state of the state of the state of the States of States III States of States in

× Y 2

IMMEDIATELY on receiving the laft letter, I went the fame day from Brighthelmstone to London, and was agreeably furprifed to find that Mr. Gibbon had dined at Lord Lucan's, and did not return to his lodgings, where I waited for him, till eleven o'clock at night. Those who have seen him within the last eight or ten years, must be furprised to hear, that he could doubt, whether his diforder was apparent. When he returned to England in 1787, I was greatly alarmed by a prodigious increase, which I always conceived to proceed from a rupture. I did not understand why he, who had talked with me on every other fubject relative to himfelf and his affairs without referve. fhould never in any fhape hint at a malady fo troublefome; but on speaking to his valet de chambre, he told me, Mr. Gibbon could not bear the least allusion to that fubject, and never would fuffer him to notice it. I confulted fome medical perfons, who with me fuppofing it to be a rupture, were of opinion that nothing could be done, and faid that he furely must have had advice, and of courfe had taken all neceffary precautions. He now talked freely with me about his diforder; which, he faid, began in the year 1761; that he then confulted Mr. Hawkins the furgeon, who did not decide whether it was the beginning of a rupture, or an hydrocele, but he defired to fee Mr. Gibbon again when he came to town. Mr. Gibbon not feeling any pain, nor fuffering any inconvenience, as he faid, never returned to Mr. Hawkins; and although the diforder continued to increase gradually, and of late years very much indeed, he never mentioned it to any perfon, however incredible it may appear, from 1761 to November 1793. I told him, that I had always supposed there was no doubt of its being a rup. ture; his answer was, that he never thought fo, and that he, and the furgeons who attended him, were of opinion that it was an hydrocele. It is now certain that it was originally a rupture, and that an hydrocele had lately taken place in the fame part; and it is remarkable, that his legs, which had been fwelled about the ankle, particularly one of them, fince he had the erifipelas in 1790, recovered their former shape as foon as the water appeared in another part, which did not happen till between the time he left Sheffield Place, in the beginning of October, and his arrival at Althorpe, towards the latter end of that month. On the Thurfday following the date of his laft letter, Mr. Gibbon was tapped for the first time; four quarts of a transparent watery fluid were discharged by that operation. Neither inflammation nor fever enfued; the tumor was diminished to nearly half its fize; the remaining part was a foft irregular mais. I had been with him two days before, and I continued with him above a week after the first tapping, during which time he enioved his ufual fpirits; and the three medical gentlemen who attended him will recollect his pleafantry. even during the operation. He was abroad again in a few days, but the water evidently collecting very faft, it was agreed that a fecond puncture fhould be made a fortnight after the first. Knowing that I should be wanted at a meeting in the country, he preffed me to attend it, and promifed that foon after the fecond operation was performed he would follow me to Sheffield-

(325)

¥ 3

(326)

Place; but before he arived I received the two following Letters:

Mr. GIBBON to Lord SHEFFIELD, at Brighton.

ST. JAMES'S STREET, Nov. 25th, 1793.

HOUGH Farquhar has promifed to write you a line, I conceive you may not be forry to hear directly from me. The operation of yesterday was much longer, more fearching, and more painful than the former; but it has eafed and lightened me to a much greater degree ". No inflammation, no fever, a delicious night, leave to go abroad to-morrow, and to go out of town when I pleafe, en attendant the future meafures of a radical cure. If you hold your intention of returning next Saturday to Sheffield Place, I fhall probably join you about the Tuefday following, after having paffed two nights at Beckenham "". The Devons are going to Bath, and the hofpitable Craufurd follows them. I paffed a delightful day with Burke; an odd one with Monfignore Erfkine, the Pope's Nuncio. Of public news, you and the papers know more than I do. We feem to have ftrong fea and land hopes; nor do I diffike the Royalifts having beaten the Sans Culottes, and taken Dol. How many minutes will it take to guillotine the feventy three new members of the convention, who are now arreft. ed? Adieu; ever yours.

(327)

To the Same.

ST. JAMES'S-STREET, Nov. 30th, 1793.

T will not be in my power to reach Sheffield-Place quite fo foon as I wilhed and expected. Lord Auckland informs me, that he shall be at Lambeth next week, Tuefday, Wednefday, and Thurfday. I have therefore agreed to dine at Beckenham on Friday. Saturday will be fpent there, and unlefs fome extraordinary temptation fould detain me another day, you will fee me by four o'clock Sunday the ninth of December. I dine to morrow with the Chancellor at Hampstead, and, what I do not like at this time of the year, without a propofal to ftay all night. Yet I would not refuse, more especially as I had denied him on a former day. My health is good; but I shall have a final interview with Farquhar before I leave town. We are still in darkness about Lord Howe and the French fhips, but hope feems to preponderate. Adieu. Nothing that relates to Louifa can be forgotten. Ever yours.

Mr. Gibbon generally took the opportunity of paffing a night or two with his friend Lord Auckland, at Eden-Farm, (ten miles from London,) on his paffage to Sheffield-Place; and notwithftanding his indifpofition, he had lately made an excursion thither from London; when he was much pleafed by meeting the Archbifhop of Canterbury, of whom he expressed a high opinion. He returned to London, to dine with Lord Loughborough, to meet Mr. Burke, Mr. Windham, and particularly Mr. Pitt, with whom he was not acquainted; and in his laft journey to Suffex, he revifited Eden-Farm, and was much gratified by the opportunity of again feeing, during a whole day, Mr. Pitt, who paffed the night there. From Lord Auckand's, Mr. Gibbon proceeded to Sheffield-Place; and his discourse was never more brilliant, nor more entertaining, than on his arrival. The parallels he drew, and the comparifons he made, between the leading men of this country, were sketched in his best manner. and were infinitely interefting. However, this laft vifit to Sheffield Place became far different from any he had ever made before. That ready, cheerful, various, and illuminating conversation, which we had before admired in him, was not now always to be found in the library or the dining-room. He moved with difficulty, and retired from company fooner than he had been used to do. On the twenty-third of December, his appetite began to fail him. He obferved to me, that it was a very bad fign with him when he could not eat his breakfaft, which he had done at all times very heartily; and this feems to have been the ftrongeft expression of apprehension that he was ever observed to utter. A confiderable degree of fever now made its appearance. Inflammation arole, from the weight and the bulk of the tumor. Water again collected very fast, and when the fever went off, he never entirely recovered his appetite even for breakfaft. I became very uneafy indeed at his fituation towards the end of the month, and thought it neceffary to advisehim to fet out for London. He had before fettled his plan to arrive there about the middle of January. I had company in the houfe, and we expected one of his particular friends; but he was obliged to facrifice all focial pleafure to the immediate attention which his health required. He went to London on the feventh of January, and the next day I received the following billet; the laft he ever wrote:

Y 4

(328)

EDWARD GIEBON Efq. to Lord SHEFFIELD.

ST. JAMES'S-STREET, four o'clock, Tuefday.

" THIS date fays every thing. I was almoft killed between Sheffield-Placeand Eaft-Grinfted, by hard, frozen, long, and crofs ruts, that would difgrace the approach of an Indian wig-wam. The reft was fomething lefs painful; and I reached this place half-dead, but not ferioufly feverifh, or ill. I found a dinner invitation from Lord Lucan; but what are dinners to me? I wifh they did not know of my departure. I catch the flying poft. What an effort 9 Adieu, till Thurfday or Friday."

By his own defire, I did not follow him till Thurfday the ninth. I then found him far from well. The tumor more diftended than before, inflamed, and ulcerated in feveral places. Remedies were applied to abate the inflammation; but it was not thought proper to puncture the tumor for the third time, till Monday the 13th of January, when no lefs than fix quarts of fluid were difcharged. He feemed much relieved by the evacuation. His fpirits continued good. He talked, as ufual, of paffing his time at houfes which he had often frequented with great pleafure, the Duke of Devonfhire's, Mr. Craufurd's, Lord Spenfer's, Lord Lucan's, Sir Ralph Payne's, and Mr. Batt's; and when I told him that I fhould not return to the country, as I had intended, he preffed me to go; knowing I had an engagement there on public bufinefs, he faid, "you may be back on Saturday, and I " intend to go on Thurfday to Devonshire House." I had not any apprehenfion that his life was in danger, although I began to fear that he might not be reftored to a comfortable ftate, and that motion would be very troublefome to him; but he talked of a radical cure. He faid, that it was fortunate the diforder had fhown itfelf while he was in England, where he might procure the best affistance; and if a radical cure could not be obtained before his return to Laufanne, there was an able furgeon at Geneva, who could come to tap him when it fhould be neceffary.

On Tuefday the fourteenth, when the rifk of inflammation and fever from the laft operation was fuppofed to be over, as the medical gentlemen who attended him expressed no fears for his life, I went that afternoon part of the way to Suffex, and the following day reached Sheffield Place. The next morning, the fixteenth, I received by the poft a good account of Mr. Gibbon, which mentioned alfo that he hourly gained ftrength. In the evening came a letter by exprefs, dated noon that day, which acquainted me that Mr. Gibbon had had a violent attack the preceding night, and that is was not probable he fhould live till I could come to him. I reached his lodgings in St. James's-ftreet about midnight, and learned that my friend had expired a quarter before one o'clock that day, the fixteenth of January 1794.

After 1 left him on Tuesday afternoon the fourteenth. he faw fome company, Lady Lucan and Lady Spenfer, and thought himfelf well enough at night to omit the opium draught, which he had been ufed to take for fome time. He flept very indifferently; before nine the next morning he rofe, but could not eat his breakfaft. However, he appeared tolerably well, yet complained at times of a pain in his ftomach. At one o'clock he received a vifit of an hour from Madame de Sylva, and at three, his friend, Mr. Craufurd, of Auchinames, (whom he always mentioned with particular regard,) called, and flayed with him till paft five o'clock. They talked, as ufual, on various fubjects; and twenty hours before his death, Mr. Gibbon happened to fall into a conversation, not uncommon with him, on the probable duration of his life. He faid, that he thought himfelf a good life for ten, twelve, or perhaps twenty years. About fix, he ate the wing of a chicken, and drank three glaffes of Madeira. After dinner he became very uneafy and impatient; complained a good deal, and appeared fo weak, that his fervant was alarmed. Mr. Gibbon had fent to his friend and relation, Mr. Robert Darell, whofe boufe was not far diftant, defiring to fee him, and adding, that he had fomething particular to fay. But, unfortunately, this defired interview never took place.

During the evening he complained much of his ftomach, and of a difpolition to vomit. Soon after nine, he took his opium draught, and went to bed. About-ten, he complained of much pain, and defired that warm napkins might be applied to his ftomach. He almost inceffantly expressed a fense of pain till about four o'clock in the morning, when he faid he found his ftomach much easier. About seven, the fervantasked, whether he should fend for Mr. Farguhar? he anfwered, no; that he was as well as he had been the day before. At about half past eight, he got out of bed, and faid he was "plus adroit" than he had been for three months paft, and got into bed again, without affistance, better than usual. About nine, he faid that he would rife. The fervant, however, perfuaded him to remain in bed till Mr. Farquhar, who was expected at eleven, fhould come. Till about that hour he spoke with great facility. Mr. Farquhar came at the time appointed, and he was then vifibly dying. When the valet de chambre returned, after attending Mr. Farquhar out of the room, Mr. Gibbon faid, " Pourquoi est ce que vous me quittez?" This was about half past eleven. At twelve, he drank fome brandy and water from a tea pot, and defired his favorite fervant to ftay with him. Thefe were the laft words he pronounced articulately. To the laft he preferved his fenfes; and when he could no longer fpeak, his fervant having afked a queftion, he made a fign, to flow that he understood him. He was quite tranquil, and did not ftir; his eyes half-fhut. About a quarter before one. he ceafed to breathe 13.

332)

10

The valet de chambre obferved, that Mr. Gibbon did not, at any time, fhow the leaft fign of alarm, or apprehension of death; and it does not appear that he ever thought himfelf in danger, unlefs his defire to fpeak to Mr. Darell may be confidered in that light.

Perhaps I dwell too long on these minute and melancholy circumstances. Yet the close of such a life can hardly fail to interest every reader; and I know that the public has received a different and erroneous account of my friend's last hours.

I can never ceafe to feel regret that I was not by his fide at this awful period: a regret fo ftrong, that I can exprefs it only by borrowing (as the eloquent Mr. Mafon has done on a fimilar occafion) the forcible language of Tacitus: Mihi preter acerbitatem amici erepti, auget meflitiam quod affidere valeuudini, fovere deficientem, fatiari vultu, complexu non contigit. It is fome confolation to me, that I have not, like Tacitus, by a long abfence, anticipated the lofs of my friend feveral years before his deceafe. Although I had not the mournful gratification of being near him on the day he expired, yet during his illnefs I had not failed to attend him with that affiduity which his genius, his virtues, and, above all, our long, uninterrupted, and happy friendfhip demanded.

POSTSCRIPT.

MR. Gibbon's Will is dated the 1ft of October 1791, juft before I left Laufanne; he diftinguistes me, as ufual, in the most flattering manner:

" I conftitute and appoint the Right Honorable John Lord Sheffield, Edward Darell Efquire, and John Thomas Batt Efquire, to be the Executors of this my laft Will and Teftament; and as the execution of this truft will not be attended with much difficulty or trouble, I fhall indulge thefe gentlemen, in the pleafure of this laft difinterefted fervice, without wronging my feelings, or oppreffing my heir, by too light or too weighty at effimony of my gratitude. My obligations to the long and active friendfhip of Lord Sheffield, I could never fufficiently repay."

He then obferves, that the Right Hon. Lady Eliot, of Port-Eliot, is his neareft relation on the father's fide; but that her three fons are in fuch profperous circumftances, that he may well be excufed for making the two children of his late uncle, Sir Stanier Porten, his heirs; they being in a very different fituation. He bequeaths annuities to two old fervants, three thoufand pounds, and his furniture, plate, &c at Laufanne, to Mr. Wilhelm de Severy: one hundred guineas to the poor of Laufanne, and fifty guineas each to the following perfons: Lady Sheffield and daughters, Maria and Louifa, Madame and Mademoifelle de Severy, the Count de Schomberg, Mademoifelle la Chanoineffe de Polier, and M. le Miniftre Le Vade, for the purchafe of fome token which may remind them of a fincere friend. The remains of Mr. Gibbon were depofited in Lord Sheffield's family burial-place in Suffex.

(335)

END OF THE FIRST VOLUME.

